

Boston Public Library

Do not write in this book or mark it with pen or pencil. Penalties for so doing are imposed by the Revised Laws of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

This book was issued to the borrower on the date last stamped below.

FORM NO. 609; 9,20,38: 100M.

MEMOIRS

OF

Mrs. Lætitia Pilkington,

WIFE TO THE

Rev. Mr. Matthew Pilkington.
Written by HERSELF.

Wherein are occasionally interspersed, Her

POEMS,

SECRET TRANSACTIONS of fome Eminent Persons.

VOL. II.

Curs'd be the Verse, how well so e'er it slow,
That tends to make one worthy Man my Foe;
Gives Vice a Sanction, Innocence a Fear,
Or from the pale-eyed Virgin draws a Tear. Pope.

Longa est injuria, longæ
Ambages: sed summa sequar fastigia rerum.
VIRG. ÆF. I.

Et dici potuisse, & non potuisse refelli. Ovid.

DUBLIN Printed:

London Reprinted: and Sold by R. Griffiths, at the Dunciad in Ludgate-street. 1749.

CT788 . P66 A3

99835

Marillan 1

TO

The RIGHT HONOURABLE

THE

Lord Baron King sborough.

My LORD,

been pleased positively to prohibit my Dedicating this Volume to You, yet as I had the following Poem written, Is A 2 could could not resist the Temptation of prefixing it to my Work, which I must rely on Your Goodness to pardon, as

I really am,

With all possible Gratitude, and Respect,

Your Lordship's

Most Obliged,

Humble Servant,

L. PILKINGTON.

Oh! King, Live for ever!

To Thee within whose Heaven illumin'd Breast,

Resides each Virtue, which adorns the Blest; 'Tis bold Presumption to attune my Lays, Seraphic Notes shou'd hymn sublimer Praise; Angels enthroned, in Bliss with Rapture view

Their own Divine Perfections live in You: Say, while you wander, thro' the rural Shade

By Saphire Fount, or Flower-enamell'd Mead,

By Wisdom nurs'd, by Contemplation sed, By both, to every Art and Science led; While sacred Honour, that immortal Guest Lives in each Action of thy Life confest; Wilt Thou, propitious, while I wake the String,

Attentive listen to the Strains I sing; No venal Lay I offer to impart,

Accept the Rapture of a grateful Heart. Come, Inspiration, from thy Hermit-Seat, O, give me flowing Numbers sweetly great! Free as his Bounties, beauteous as his

Frame,

And pure and bright, as his unspottedFame; For

For Nature, prodigal to King, has given All Gifts, admir'd on Earth, and dear to Heaven:

Then to Hibernia, lent this facred Store, Too bleft Hibernia, can'ft thou wish for more:

Philosophers can, from the Noon-tide Sun, Extract one solar Ray, tho' finely spun; Then, in that Ray, the various Colours shew,

With which God paints the Rain-foretelling

Bow;

May I, like them, presume, with happy Art,

To trace, distinct, the Virtues of thy Heart, Or turn, astonish'd, from the dazzling

Light,

And own it too intolerably bright,
When every Beam does with full Force unite.

Heredid I pause, when, lo! the Heaven-

born Muse,

Who, if aright invok'd, will ne'er refuse Her Aid, appear'd, and said, thy noble Choice

May better than the Muse inspire thy

Voice:

To me eternal Wisdom gave the Care Of King, no meaner Power could interfere;

Pleas'd with the Task, I took the lovely Child,

Blooming as Spring, with Looks ferenely

mild;

Hence flows beneficent his boundless Mind, The Joy, the Love, the Friend of Humankind;

Modesty, Learning, Genius, Wit, and Taste,

By Female Sweetness, manly Virtue grac'd; Hence take their Source, oh Fav'rite of the Skies!

To which, tho' late, triumphant shalt Thou rise;

There mix with Souls, like Thine, divinely pure,

And taste the Rapture sitted to endure:

She ceas'd; Thanks heavenly Visitant, I faid,

To Thee my Gratitude be ever paid; For what, sufficient, may I render Thee, Who rais'd a PATRON that protected me;

Who view'd my Anguish with a pitying Eye,

When even a Son, and Brother past it by. All-righteous Heaven, attend my ardent Pray'r, Make him thy constant, thy peculiar Care, Whose Mercy, like the Dews that bless the Ground.

Silently falls, refreshing all around;

Whil,

While, with such winning Grace, his Bounties slow,

They double all the Blessings they bestow; Touch'd with a painful Joy, the lab'ring Heart

Struggles its mighty Transport to impart; Meanings crowd thick, the Tongue its Aid denies, fupplies.

And springing Tears the Loss of Speech

The P—rs of Ireland long have been a Jest, Their own, and ev'ry other Climate's Pest; But King shall grace the Coronet he wears, And make it vie with Britain's noblest Stars;

And when, in Time, to grace his nuptial Bed,

Some chafte, illustrious Charmer he shall wed:

May Love, and Joy, and Truth, the Pomp attend,

And deathless Honour to his Race descend.

MEMOIRS

OF

Mrs. PILKINGTON.

proceed: I got as far as Chester; but, as it was Winter, the Stage Coach set out but once a Week, namely on Monday; and as I did not land till Tuesday, I had near a Week to stay at an Inn, an Expence my poor Pocket could not well afford. But Providence sent me a timely Relief; for as I was sitting with my Landlady, by her Kitchen Fire, a Gentleman came in, who knew me; he was going to Ireland, and the Wind proving contrary, Vol. II. B he was a Fellow Prisoner, as I may call it, with me; and a very agreeable one he proved, for he never permitted me to pay a Farthing. My Landlady, who was really a Gentlewoman, and he, and I, diverted away the Time with Ombre, Reading, and Pratling, very tolerably: And as the Gentleman knew my Misfortunes, and had known all my Family, he very generously, and not without many Apologies, gave me three Guineas; a very seasonable Assistance: Thus we may see, that Each good the virtuous Soul itself denies, The watchful Care of Providence supplies.

By this I was enabled to travel. I learned with great Pleasure, that a Member of Parliament and two Gentlemen of the Law, had taken Places in the Coach, and hoped for an agreeable Journey; but fadly disappointed I was, for certainly three such Brutes I never saw; they affronted me every Moment, because I was born in Ireland; and I believe they had not the Cholick, for they made themselves very easy:

But

But the worst Circumstance of all was, that they used to fit up drinking all Night, and forced me to pay my Club for their Wine, though I never even saw it.

They were great Walpolians, and many a Trick in the Elections did they relate before me, taking it for granted that I was a Fool: At last, they very civilly demanded of me, what Business I had to London? So, resolving to divert myself, I told them, I was going there in hopes Sir Robert would marry me; this made them very merry, they laughed at my Folly, and I at theirs. At length we picked up a Welch Parson, of whom I had the Honour of making a Conquest, which afforded us great Entertainment, for about fifty Miles. I always permitted him to pay my Club; but, like a true Levite, he began to offer a little more of his Civility than I was willing to accept of; fo, finding that would not do, he made me a Present of a Ginger-bread-nut, curioufly wrapt up in white Paper, and after making me give him a Promise to write to him, he left us.

As my Fellow-Travellers had observed his amorous Behaviour, and faw him deliver his Present, they earnestly requested to know what it was; fo to oblige them, I shewed it. When we came to St. Albans, we were met by a Gentleman in a Coach and Six, whom they stilled the great Mr. Mid-ton, of Chirk-Castle in Denbighshire, who was related to them all; so they went into his Coach, and I got two Female Companions. However, we all baited at the same Inn at Barnet, and this prodigious Man infifted on having the Ladies for his Guests; and, laying hold of my Hand, he swore that little Hibernian Nymph should dine with him; so up Stairs we all went, where he entertained us with an Account of his ample Estate, faying, it was much larger than the Duke of Bedford's; but how unworthy he was to possess it, the Sequel will shew.

My Adventures with the Welch Parson made him laugh very heartily; and he infifted on my keeping my Promise in writing to him, assuring me he would take care the Letter should go safe. So, by way of Amusement, I scribbled as follows:

SIR,

Your Ginger-bread, unbroken, Remains a true Love Token.

Am affured, by your honourable Countrymen, that you pass for a Wit in Wales; it is therefore my sincere Advice to you, never to quit it, lest the rest of the World should be malicious enough to refuse you your due Praise. As for the You offered to me, why you offered it like a Priest, and I refused it like a Fool; if you write to me, direct, To the Right Honourable the Lady W—lp—le, in Downing-street, Westminster. I will endeavour to prevail on my Spouse elect to send you a Fiddle and a Hogshead of good October, to entertain your Parishioners every Sunday.

I am, sweet Sir Crape,

Yours.

Mr. Mid-ton faid, he thought I could read Men as well as Sir Robert. But now

Came the Reckoning, when the Feast was o'er,

The dreadful Reck'ning! and we smil'd no more.

For our Grandee made us pay our Club! 'tis true, indeed, he writ fomething to make me amends, which was this:

My Charmer,

F you will leave a Line for a Brownjohn's Coffee-House in Ormond Street, and give me a Direction where to find you, you shall find a Friend in

J. M-n.

never

But really I never did, so we parted, and I never saw him more. The Sample he had given of the Narrowness of his Heart was sufficient to disgust me; and tho' I am not fond of making national Restections, yet I would of all things never trust a Welchman, lest, as Falstass fays of the Welch Fairy, he should transform me into a Piece of toasted Cheese.

At length I got to London, where, after having paid all Demands, I had three Guineas left, with which the next Day I took a Lodging in Berry-Street, St. fames's.

I wrote to Ireland to no purpose it feemed; for I never got any Answer; fo in a very short Time I was in great Distress, and knew not what to do. Having heard Mr. Ed-d W-p-le was a very humane Gentleman, I wrote to him, and he fent me a Letter in return, wherein he promised to wait on me the next Evening, and accordingly came; nay, and fate with me three Hours; at the End of which Time he told me, he did not know how he could possibly be of any Service to me. I told him I had fome Poems, which I intended to print by Subfcription, and if he would do me the Honour of promoting it, it was all the Favour I desired. He answered, if he undertook it, he should certainly neglect it; but however he would give me some Money; so he pulled out his Purse, and took out five Guineas: Would not any Person have then thought themselves sure of them? but according to the old Proverb, Many a thing falls out between the Lip and the Cup; the Gentleman took a second Thought, and put the Guineas in his Purse again, assuring me, it was not convenient for him to part with them.

And, indeed, I believe he is a Beast without a Heart; for this is his constant Answer to every Person, as I have frequently observed, when those whom he chose for Friends and Companions wanted but the smallest Assistance from him. So he

For Poets open Table kept,
But ne'er consider'd where they slept;
Himself, as rich as sifty fews,
Was easy, tho' they wanted Shoes.

Swift.

On this I arose, and told him, as I perceived it was not in his Inclination to do me any Service, I would no longer take up his important Time, and civilly difmiffed him.

Mr. Dodsley ventured to print The TRIAL OF CONSTANCY, by which I got about five Guineas, and a much greater Happiness, the Favour and Friendship of the POET LAUREAT. I was advised to enclose one of them to him, which I did, in as genteel a Letter as I knew how to write: The good Gentleman came to visit me, and did me every Act of Friendship in his Power; it is to his unwearied Zeal in my Behalf, that I owe that I yet live to thank him; for,

Had I not been by him fupply'd, I must a thousand Times have dy'd.

I must not here omit, that when the Poem was published, I enclosed two of them to Mr. W-lp-le, who wrote me a Letter of Thanks, and that was all: Mem. he owes me Two Shillings.

As I wanted to make Interest with the Great, I took a Lodging in St. James's Street, exactly opposite to White's Chocolate-house, where happening to see Capt. Meade go in, I wrote over to him, and he was so kind to give me an Invitation to his House, which was within a small Mile from Hampton-Court, a delightful Walk through Bushy-Park leading to it: This saved me a great deal of Expence: for as the Parliament was now broke up, London was quite empty, and Mr. Cibber being gone to Tunbridge, I could not, 'till the Return of Winter, hope to gain any Subscribers, so I went into the Country with great Pleasure.

The Captain had a very sweet Dwelling, a pretty Wise, and sour lovely Children. We went to Church the following Sunday: Dr. Hales was Minister of the Parish, and it was customary with him, whenever he saw a Stranger in his Congregation, to pay them a Visit; so, after Evening Prayer, we were honoured with his Company. Capt. Meade told him, I was his Sister Parson and Sister Writer; a merry Sort of an Introduction. The Doctor asked me, what I wrote? and the Captain answered fwered for me, that I was going to publish a Volume of Poems by Subscription. I told the Doctor, my Writings might amuse, but his made the World the wiser and the better, as I had had the Pleasure of reading them. I turned the Discourse to Natural Philosphy, on which the Doctor gave us an Invitation to a Course of Experiments the next Day. Tho' nothing I then faw was new to me, yet his Reflections on every Object were, as by them he demonstrated the Divinity; and, wrapt in holy Extafy, he foared above this little terrene Spot, and, like a true High Priest, led his Auditors up to the Holiest of Holies.

After this facred Banquet, with which my Soul was fo elevated, that I could not avoid paying him my Acknowledgments in, I believe, an enthusiastic Strain, we walked into the Garden, where we were entertained with some sine Fruit, Cream, Wine, &c. a rural Collation.

The Doctor asked me, if I had any printed Proposals for my Poems, to which he promised not only to subscribe himself, but also to use his Interest for me; I told him I had, and that I would give him some when I came to Prayers the next Morning.

But I could not fleep all Night, fo at Day-break I arose, and walked into Bushy-Park; I fat down by the Side of a fine Cascade, and listened to the tunefully-fallling Waters fo long, that methought they became vocal, and uttered articulate Sounds; 'till, lulled by them, I fell infenfibly afleep, when fuddenly I imagined the Water-Nymph, to whom this Spring belonged, arose before me with a lovely Countenance, and a transparent azure Robe, and putting a Paper into my Hand, disappeared. I thought I read it; and as I prefently awoke, I remembered all the Lines; fo, having a Pencil and Sheet of Paper in my Pocket, I wrote them down.

To the Reverend Dr. HALES.

AII., holy Sage! whose comprehensive Mind,

Not to this narrow Spot of Earth confin'd, Thro' num'rous Worlds can Nature's Laws explore,

Where none but Newton ever trod before;

And,

And, guided by Philosophy divine,

See thro' his Works th' Almighty Maker fhine:

Whether you trace him thro' you rolling Spheres,

Where, crowned with boundless Glory, he appears;

Or in the Orient Sun's resplendent Rays, His fetting Lustre, or his Noontide Blaze, New Wonders still thy curious Search attend.

Begun on Earth, in highest Heav'n to end.

O! while thou dost those God-like Works pursue,

What Thanks, from Humankind, to Thee are due!

Whose Error, Doubt, and Darkness, You remove,

And charm down Knowledge from her Throne above.

Nature, to Thee, her choicest Secrets yields,

Unlocks her Springs, and opens all her Fields:

Shews

Shews the rich Treasure that her Breast contains,

In azure Fountains, or enamell'd Plains; Each healing Stream, each Plant of virtuous Use,

To thee their Medicinal Pow'rs produce: Pining Difease and Anguish wing their Flight,

And rofy Health renews us to Delight.

When You, with Art, the Animal dissect,

And, with the microscopic Aid, inspect, Where, from the Heart, unnumber'd Rivers glide,

And faithful back return their purple Tide; How fine the Mechanism, by Thee display'd!

How wonderful is ev'ry Creature made! Veffels, too small for Sight, the Fluids strain, Concoct, digest, assimilate, sustain: In deep Attention, and Surprize, we gaze, And, to Life's Author, raptur'd, pour out Praise.

What

What Beauties dost Thou open to the Sight,

Untwifting all the Golden Threads of Light!

Each Parent Colour tracing to its Source, Distinct they live, obedient to Thy Force! Nought from Thy Penetration is conceal'd,

And LIGHT, Himself, shines to Thy Soul reveal'd.

So when the Sacred Writings You difplay,

And on the mental Eye shed purer Day; In radiant Colours Truth array'd we see, Confess her Charms, and guided up by Thee;

Soaring sublime, on Contemplation's Wings, The Fountain seek, whence Truth eternal springs.

Fain would I wake the confecrated Lyre,
And fing the Sentiments Thou didst inspire!

But find my Strength unequal to a Theme, Which asks a Milton's, or a Seraph's Flame! If, thro' weak Words, one Ray of Reason shine, Thine was the Thought, the Errors only mine.

Yet may these Numbers to the Soul impart

The humble Incense of a grateful Heart. Trisles, with God himself, Acceptance find, If offer'd with Sincerity of Mind; Then, like the Deity, Indulgence shew, Thou, most like Him, of all his Works below.

After this pleasing Reverie, I returned home, and had sufficient Time to transcribe the Lines fair, and dress myself ere the Eell rung for Morning Prayer. As we were coming out of Church, I gave the Poem and some Proposals, made up in a Pacquet, to the Doctor; who came in the Evening to visit us, and brought another Clergyman with him, who was the Minister of Henley upon Thames; they both subscribed to me, and took a good many of the Proposals, which they disposed of to Persons of Distinction.

So having got a little Money, and Capt. Meade being commanded on Duty to the Tower for fix Months, we all came to London; where finding my Lodging empty, I once more returned to St. James's.

My good Friend Mr. Cibber was my first Visitor: He had got about four Guineas for me; and told me, he was affured, by a Gentleman of Ireland, who frequented White's, that my Husband was a Poet, and that all I had to publish were only fome Trifles I had stolen from him, which had greatly injured me: "But (faid he) to " fet that Right, you must take some "Subject, that has never yet been touched " upon, drefs it poetically, and fend the "Lines to White's." This was really a hard Task; but as my Credit was now at Stake, I was obliged to exert myself, and the next Day sent him the following Lines.

To Mr. CIBBER.

WHEN You advis'd me, Sir, to chuse

Some odd new Subject for the Muse,

From

From Thought to Thought unpleas'd I chang'd,

Thro' Nature, Art, and Science rang'd;
Yet still could nought discover New,
Till, happily, I fix'd on You.
Your Stoic Turn, and chearful Mind,
Have mark'd You, out of all Mankind,
The oddest Theme my Muse can find.

Like other Men, you nothing do;
The World's one Round of Joy to You.
The Wife, the Weak, the Sot, the Sage,
Your Hours can equally engage:
Tho' Sense and Merit are Your Choice,
You can with gayest Fops rejoice;
Can taste them all, in Season sit,
And match their Follies, or their Wit.

Truth has in you fo fix'd her Seat,
Not all your Converse with the Great
Has yet missed you to Deceit.
Your Breast so bare, so free from Blame, Why sure your Heart and Tongue's the same!

Most Hearts the harder grow with Years, But yours yet lends th' Afflicted Tears;

Has .

Has Merit pin'd in Want and Grief?
Your bounteous Hand has brought Relief.
To you, where Frailty shades the Soul,
One shining Grace commends the whole.
Can no Experience make you wiser,
Nor Age convert you to a Miser?

New too in other Points I find you, Where modern Wits are thrown behind

Some praise a Patton, and reveal him; You paint so true, you can't conceal him: Their gawdy Praise undue hur shames him, vi nile yours, by Likeness, only names him. Not Wit, that libels, makes you grave, At what you fmile, my Sense wou'd rave; While jealous Bards by Dunces stung, With Verse provok'd, aveng'd the Wrong, With an uncommon Candour, you Such Bards more humanely fubdue: Calm and compos'd, your conscious Spirit Can celebrate with Praise their Merit: Thus yielding conquer; for fure Nature Must feel such Praise sting worse than Satyr.

Still am I warm'd to fing your Oddness, Your Singularity in Goodness!

When to the Wealthy and the Great, Adorn'd with Honours and Estate, My Muse, forlorn! has sent her Pray'r, Shunn'd were the Accents of Despair, 'Till your excited Pity sped her, And with collected Bounties sed her; Chear'd her sad Thoughts, like genial Spring,

And tun'd once more her Voice to fing. Bear then her grateful Notes, and be Yourfelf her Theme and Harmony. Cou'd she, like yours, exalt her Lays, Polite Artificer of Praise! From the sweet Song you'd jealous grow, And guard the Laurel on your Brow.

If, which I know, these Facts are true, Confess, at least, the Verse is new, That publicly speaks well of you.

This met with a very favourable Reception, and Mr. Cibber shewed it to all the Nobles

Noblemen at White's, as a Means to engage them to subscribe to me, which, to oblige him, many of them did; and, to make it public, Mr. Cibber inserted it in a Pamphlat of his own called the Egotist, or Colley upon Cibber.

The next Day a pleasant droll Gentleman, who was fo old that he had been Page to King James when he was Duke of York, infifted on Mr. Cibber's introducing him to me, which accordingly he did. This Gentleman, who was a Colonel in the first Regiment of Foot Guards, had by Nature all that Education gives to others; neither had his Years in the least deprest the Vivacity or Gallantry of his Spirit. He faid a thousand witty Things in half an Hour, and at last, with as great Gravity as his comic Face would admit of, faid, that he wished I would take him into Keeping. I answered, I had really never seen any Person with whom I was better entertained, and, therefore, if he would make over all his real and personal Estate to me, and d spose of his Regiment, and give me the Money; I would keep him out of it. He fwore a good Oath, he believed me, and liked me for my-Sincerity. ——— I could relate a Number of pleafant Stories of this old Gentleman; but as his Wit generally bordered on Indecency, and sometimes on Prophaneness, they are not proper for a female Pen.

He used to hire me to write Love Letters to him, which, as a Proof of his being a young Man, he shewed at White's; Lord W—m—th was curious to see the Writer; upon which he brought his Lordship, and Lord Aug—stus F—tz R—y, since dead, to visit me. They bantered me on my Taste, in writing so many fine Things to an old Fellow, when so many young ones, themselves in particular, would be proud of them——I assured their Lordships, I would oblige them on the same Terms I did the Colonel, who always paid me hand-somely for my Compliments.

This turned all their Raillery on the Colonel, who with great good Humour confessed the Truth. "Why Colonel, said Lord F—z R—y, you told us you supported ported this Lady."——" Ay, returned he, but you know I am an old Lyar."

The Noblemen infifted on my telling them how much a piece the Colonel gave ne for writing Billetdoux to him. The Colonel answered, that his Money had been atal to my Family; for that he had lent ny Uncle Colonel Mead twenty Guineas one Night at the Groom Porters, who dlied the next Morning of an Apoplectic Fit; and fo, faid he, "out of pure Affection to my dear little one here, I am very cautious how I give her any; befides, added he, very archly, I could not be convinced of the Sincepity of her Passion for me, if she made any Demands on my Pocket."

Lord W—m—th asked me, how I approved of this Doctrine? I answered, the Colonel, had so genteel and witty a manner of excusing his Avarice, that should he ever grow generous, we should lose a thousand Pleasantries.

Each of the Noblemen gave me a Guinea, by way of Subscription to my Poems; they pressed hard on the Colonel for his Contribution, which, for the Read fons aforefaid, he absolutely refused.

This gave Occasion to the following Lines; which, left the Colonel should not communicate, I inclosed to Lord F-z-R-y.

To the Hon. Colonel D-NC-BE.

SINCE fo oft to the Great of my Favours you boaft,

When, you know, you enjoy'd but some Kisses at most;

And those, as you say, never ought to be fold,

For Love's too divine, to be barter'd for Gold.

Since this is your Maxim, I beg a Receipt,

To know, how without it a Lover can eat.

For tho' the fine Heroes, we read in Romances,

Subfifted whole Weeks upon amorous Fancies;

And

And yet were fo ftrong, if those Writers fay true,

That Dragons, and Giants, some thoufands they slew;

Those Chiefs were of Origin surely divine! And descended from fove, as direct as a Line.

But in our corrupted, degenerate Days,

We find neither Heroes, nor Lovers, like these:

Our Men have scarce Courage to speak to a Lass,

'Till they've had a full Meal, and a chirrupping Glass;

And fo much in myself of the Mortal I find,

That my Body wants Diet, as well as my Mind.

Now, pray, Sir, confider the Cafe of your Mistress,

Who neither can kiss, nor write Verses, in Distress:

For Bacchus, and Ceres, we frequently prove, Are Friends to the Muses, as well as to Love.

Vol. II. C Lord

Lord A—fus did not fail to shew the Lines to all the Noblemen at White's, who heartily bantered the Colonel on his Generosity to his Mistress.

The next Day, as I was sprinkling some Flower-pots, which stood on very broad Leads, under the Dining-room Window, Colonel D—nc—be, the Duke of B—lt—n, and the Earl of W—nch—ea stood filling out Wine, and drinking to me: So I took up the Pen and Ink, sull in their View; and, as I was not acquainted with any of them, except the Colonel, I sent over to him these Lines:

OUR rofy Wine
Looks bright and fine;
But yet it does not chear me:
The Cause I guess,
Is surely this,
The Bottle is not near me.

You shew that Sight,
To give Delight,
If I may truly judge ye:
But would ye move
My Wit, or Love,
I beg, Sir, I may pledge ye.

Lord

Lord W—nch—ea bid the Colonel fend me all the Wine in the House: "Ah! (said the Colonel) that might in"jure her Health, but I will send her one Bottle of Burgundy, to chear her Spirits."
Accordingly the Waiter brought it; the Noblemen all gathered to the Window, so he filled me out a Glass, which, making them a low Reverence, I drank, and retired.

But the Colonel, resolving to have Share, quickly followed his Bottle; he came in a desperate ill Temper; cursed the K-g, D- of C-l-d, the whole M---y, and me into the Bargain. I asked him, whether giving me a Bottle of Wine had grieved him fo much? He faid, No; but that he had been fifty Years in the Army, and was but Lieutenant-Colonel; and that the D-of C-l-d had put a young Fellow over his Head. He pulled down his Stocking, and shewed me where he had been shot through the Leg at the Siege of Liste; then he opened his Bosom, on which he had feveral honourable Scars, and fwore heartily, that, were it not in a Time of War, he would throw up his Commission. I could not but agree, that his Resentment had but too just a Foundation; "But, dear Sir, I had no hand "in all this." "No; (said he) but I "did not know any Person, to whom I " could speak my Mind freely, or who " would bear my Peevishness, but you." "Well, Sir, (faid I) an you were as pee-"vish as an Emperor, I'll bear it all, " fince you please to bestow it on me. "But I believe we had as good drink our. "Burgundy, and we will new model the "Government according to our Fancies." He fat very pensive, said his Head aked, then rose in a surly Sort of a manner, and went over to White's.

Whether any thing he had met with there pleafed him, I know not, but about Nine at Night, as I fat writing, I heard his Voice on the Stairs, crying, "Poke "after me, my Lord, poke after me." So I bid my Maid, light the Colonel up: He brought with him his Grace of M-lb-gb,

M-lb-gb, a lovely Gentleman; he presented him to me, by his Title, which was honoured by his wearing it. The D- faluted me; but what shall I now fay! I think my boafted Constancy of Mind quite forfook me; I trembled at his Touch, and, though I knew not why, was more disordered at Sight of him, than ever I had been before in my Life. The Colonel asked me, what was the Matter? I faid, I believed I had drank too much Tea, which, joined to the unexpected Honour he had now conferred on me, put me into a little Flutter.

His Grace laid hold of my Hand, and kiffed it, faying, it was the fweetest Thing in Nature, to put a Lady into a "Colonel, I shall meet you at Worker, "either to-night or to-morrow Morn-"ing; for I have a mind to have a little "Chat with this Lady alone." The Colonel knew his Duty too well to disobey a M-lb-gb, and left us, wishing his Grace Success.

Now, indeed, for the first Time, I was afraid of myself; but was infinitely more so, when his Grace told me, he had learned from the Colonel, that I was in some Distress, and, opening his Pocket-Book, presented me with a Bank Note on Sir Francis Child for Fifty Pounds.

This was the Ordeal, or fiery Trial; Youth, Beauty, Nobility of Birth, and unfought Generofity, attacking at once the most desolate Person in the World. His Grace, I believe, guessed at my Apprehensions, by the Concern which was but too visible in my Countenance, and generously assured me, that he was above making any hard Conditions, that I might look up with Chearfulness, and not rivet my Eyes to the Floor but consider him a uncere and disinterested Friend.

This quite revived me, and gave me an unufual Flow of Spirits, which highly pleafed my illustrious Benefactor: He defired I would write fomething merry to the Colonel, who, at his Departure, charged me not to wrong his Bed. So to pleafe his Grace, and also to convince him I could could write, I gave him, in about ten Minutes, the following Lines.

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 31

STREPHON to-night his Chloe told,
He had the Head-ach, and grew old;
Tho' well she knew her artful Swain
But counterfeited Age and Pain,
To hide his cold declining Passion,
His Want of Love and Inclination;
For Chloe's Face, so often seen,
Put her poor Strephon in the Spleen;
Nor could her Wit, or Neatness please him,

Or all her Smiles or Prattle raise him: He lest the pensive Nymph alone, His painful Absence to bemoan.

Strephon beware, lest in return,
With a new Flame your Chloe burn;
Consider I have Sp—n—r seen,
And quickly lay aside your Spleen;
Or, by the God of Verse, I vow,
With Antlers I'll adorn your Brow;
No City Knight shall boast a Pair
More large, more branching, or more fair:

Their Horns are gilt, but yours shall be As naked as a blasted Tree.

So, Sir, no more of your Deception, For I am bleft with quick Perception; Phæbus has given me piercing Eyes, To look thro' Falshood and Difguise; Then lay aside this little Art, I have, and I will keep your Heart.

His Grace was very well pleafed with my Gaity, and undertook to deliver the Letter himfelf; fo we parted, each of us, I believe, fatisfied with ourselves, and our own Conduct.

I know at least I as; for upon-calling my Heart to account for the Trouble it had given me, I found by the Symptoms, there was something very like Love had seized it.

The Colonel came in the Morning, and brought with him Mr. Tr - v - r, Brother to the D is of M-lb-gb, whom he introduced to me, and then merrily asked me, if I was going to reward his constant tender Flame, with a great

great staring Pair of Horns? I told him he deferved them for his ill Temper; but, however, as he made me full amends by the Honour of making me known to so great and good a Man as he had recommended me to, I would take some Time to consider of the Matter.

Mr. Tr-v-r defined to know which of the Sp-n-r's it was, I threatned the Colonel with? I told him, I wrote any thing by way of Amusement; but either of them would serve my Turn.

The Colonel called me a merry Madcap; Mr. Tr-v-r affured me, he was at my Service, and would hornify the Colonel whenever I pleafed. If told him, I was obliged to him for his kind Offer, and would certainly apply to him, if I found myfelf in any Diffress; and in the mean Time, I hoped, as an earnest of his future Favour, he would be so kind as to subscribe to my Poems, which accordingly he did.

My Readers may now imagine, I was in a fair Way of growing rich; but, indeed, it was far otherwise, as I paid a Guinea a Week for my Lodging, kept a Servant, was under a Necessity of being always dressed, and had besides so many distressed Persons of my own Country, who did me the Honour to take a Dinner with me, and, in return for my Easiness, said every thing of me which they thought could injure, or expose me; that being naturally liberal, and, till I heartily suffered for my Folly, no very great Oeconomist, I rather ran out than saved.

C 5

vant₂₀

And, as I have thrown some Sort of Reflection on the English, I must beg leave to be equally free with my own Country Folks. Take Notice, I except the Nobility and Gentry of each Kingdom, who, I really believe, in Honour, Valour, or Generofity of Spirit, are not be matched in any Part of the habitable Globe. Yet, partial as I may be to my native Country, the English and Irish seem to have different Characteristics: The lower Part of the People of England are blunt and honest; the lower Part of the People of Ireland, civil and deceitful: Nor did I ever fuffer in England, either in point of Fortune or Reputation, but either by the Thefts, or the Tongues of the Irish.

Repu-

My Landlady came up one Morning very chearful, and told me her Daughter's Husband, Dr. T-rn-ll, who had not been to see her for two Years, on account of some Difference they had, told her he would, as he was to preach at St. James's Chapel next Day, (being one of the Chaplains to his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales) take up his Lodging in her House that Night. I congratulated herupon it; but observing by her Looks that she was under fome Uneafiness, I asked her the Cause of it; after some Hesitation, and a Number of Apologies, she told me, she had no Accommodation for him, but by giving him her own Bed, and begged I would, for a Night, give her leave to fleep with me and my Maid, to which I readily confented; but recollecting what a miferable Bed she had, in a dark Closet, very unfit for a Gentleman to lie in, I told her, I would, with great Pléasure, leave my Apartment for the Doctor, which was, as may be presumed by the Price, a genteel one, and for a Night take up my Residence with her. She seemed overjoyed at the Proposal, and as I had some little Trisle to buy, I went out, and did not return till about Six in the Evening; so not meeting any body in the Way below Stairs, I went up to my own Apartment, where I sound the Doctor reading, and the old Gentlewoman fast asseep.

I begged pardon for my Intrusion, and the old Dame told him how much he was indebted to my Complaisance in quitting my Apartment to oblige him with it. I could have wished, she had been silent in this particular; for as she had not apprized him of it before, he was too polite to suffer it, nor could any Entreaties of mine prevail on him to accept my Offer.

Prefently after, being gone down Stairs, he fent his Compliments up, and begged I would lend him a Book to amuse himself till Bed-time, so being willing to cultivate the good Opinion he seemed to have conceived of me, I sent him my own Poems in Manuscript, which, pardon my Vanity, did not fail to confirm it.

The

The next Day, which was Sunday, as foon as Afternoon Service was over, he very kindly paid me a Visit, and seemed so well pleased with my Prattle, that it was Midnight before either of us thought of Repose: But I do assure my Readers his Mother-in-law kept us Company.

He entertained me with an Account of whatever he had met with curious in his Travels: His Remarks on every Subject were delivered with Modesty and Judgment, in a flowing and elegant Style. He was so kind to promise me the Favour of taking a Dish of Cossee with me in the Morning, which produced a merry Adventure.

The Noblemen at White's, having heard that I was married to a Clergyman, and feeing one walking to and fro in my Dining-room, supposed it must be the very identical Parson, and that he was come to make up Matters with me; so none of them would venture over, lest it should incur his Displeasure against me; but Colonel D—nc—be, whose Curiosity was up, resolved at a Distance to reconnoitre the Ground.

Ground, and bring them a faithful Account of the Enemy's Situation, for so he stiled the Parson.

There was a very grand Milliner's Shop next Door to my Lodging, from whence I received a Message, that a Lady, just come from Ireland, desired to speak with me; upon which I immediately went, full of Hope to receive some Account of my Children: I there sound the Colonel, who told me, he was the Lady; and, with his usual Gaity, added, that if I questioned his Sex, I need but permit him to be my Bedsellow for a Week, and I should never know any thing to the contrary.

I answered, I really believed him; inas I had known a Gentleman, young enough to be his Grandson, who had lived with me in all the peacable Innocence of a Man of Threescore, like a civil careless Husband, as he was.

As the Colonel was acquainted with my History, he laughed heartily, and faid, "He must be some damned Parson, for nobody (said he) but one belonging to the

"the Church could have had half that "Continency. But, my dear little one, "(for that was the Name he always called me), I have some News to tell you; I desire you may brush up your Counternance, your Fire, and yourself, because you are likely to have some very grand "Visitors to-morrow; no less than Mr. "St—b—e, the Earl of W—ncb—ea, and his Brother Mr. F—cb."

The Colonel then told me the Reason of his sending for me in that manner was, that he had observed a Pason walking in my Room; and asked, who it was? I told him, it was Dr. T—bull, no way related to me.

As this Adventure with the Clergyman afforded great Matter of Diversion at White's, I cannot help here relating another. I was in very great Distress, and was advised to apply to the then Lord Archbishop of York, now, by the Grace of God, Lord Archbishop of Canterbury; I say, by the Grace of God, because I believe he never was yet excelled by any of the primitive Bishops; a Person, in whom the Beauty of Holiness fully appears. I went to his House, in Kensington-square, and, to my infinite Surprize, had free Access to his Grace, without even a Question being asked: I presented him with the following Lines.

This Poem was written just at the Beginning of the Rebellion, in which his Grace, like a true Son of the Church militant, had nobly taken up Arms in the Defence of Liberty, Property, and the Protestant Religion.

Having been obliged to the Right Honourable Henry Pelham, I thought it not improper to include two fuch great and eminent Persons in one Poem, which was as follows:

To his Grace the Lord Archbishop of YORK.

A S God, who now does, as in Times of old,

His high Behests to righteous Men unfold; And from thick Mists, purging the visual

. Ray,

Beams on his chosen Sons celestial Day;

Late-

Late to the pious Prelate, YORK, reveal'd,

What from the Sons of Belial lay conceal'd:

The Many, flown with Infolence and Wine,

Unfit, such Ears, to hear of Things Divine.

Behold, oh chosen Messenger of Grace! Said God, the Wickedness of human Race! Britain, behold, my once-lov'd fav'rite Ifle,

Lo, all Impurities her Face defile

Why are there Pray'rs, or public Fasts proclaim'd?

My Pow'r is mock'd at, and my Word blasphem'd;

Think they, vite Worms! with Arts, or gloffing Lines,

To 'scape my Vengeance, or deceive my Eyes?

No; as to Idol Lusts their Bodies bow, So shall their Limbs the foreign Fields bestrew,

MEMOIRS of

42

Nay, ev'n the proud Metropolis, shall feel The red-hot Vengeance, and the mur-d'rous Steel.

Then, holy YORK, the Lord of Life bespoke:

Oh, gracious God! this dread Decree revoke;

Wilt Thou, with Wisdom, Justice, Mercy, crown'd,

Alike the Virtuous and the Vile confound?

Twenty, perhaps, in Britain may'st Thous

Who keep thy Laws, and write them on their Mind;

All, fure, shall perish, by thy mighty Word,

But wilt Thou speak in Wrath?—far be it from Thee, Lord.

To him, Jehovah: By Myself, I swear, For Twenty's Sake, the Kingdom will I spare.

Oh, be not angry, while I plead again, Perhaps not Twenty may be found, but: Ten;

Ten

Ten Men, whom no Temptation can subdue,

True to Religion, to it's Altars true.

To him, JEHOVAH: As thy Soul doth live.

Find me but One, and England I forgive.

View then, oh Lord! you Minister of State,

See him, in ev'ry Action Good and Great;

Stemming Corruption with an outstretch'd Hand;

Who, but Himself, the Torrent can withstand?

See Him, like Nile, diffusing Bounty round.

evers a barren, an ungrateful Ground; Thro' various Channels, Pleasure to impart, To raise the Fall'n, to chear the dying

Heart;

Foo oft, alas! in the transfucent Wave Do Crocodiles and wily Serpents lave, studious to poison the delightful Stream, Which unpollute flows on ;—and mindful whence it came,

Conscious of Thee, it's sacred hidden Source,

To re-unite thy Bounty, bends it's Force

Wifely thou speak'st, the living Lord reply'd,

Nor be thou, righteous Advocate, de ny'd;

Superior Worth arrests the lifted Rod,
So dear is Virtue in the Sight of God;
Nor will I Vengeance on the Guilty take,
But England spare, for YORK and PELHAM' Sake.

I told the Servant, when I delivered them, it was not a Petition: He said, it were, his Grace never resused one; and shewed me into a handsome Drawing. Room. In a sew Minutes, his Grace entered, with a sweet and placid Air; but looked so young, that I never once imagined him to be the Archbishop, having joined the associate Idea of Wrinkles, Avarice, and Pride, to that Title,—in which I sound myself, happily for once, mistaken. As it was early in the Morning, he said aid, he was fure I had not breakfasted, and bid one of the Servants bring some Tea, and defire his Coufin to come, and keep the Lady Company: As it was near half an Hour before I faw her, his Grace isked me, who I was? I answered, which was Truth, I was a Gentleman's Daugher, of the Kingdom of Ireland; that I had, when I was very young, been married to Clergyman; that I had three Children living. His Grace, taking it for granted, that I was a Widow, which Mistake it was, by no Means, my Interest to clear up, demanded of me, what I had to support us? I answered, Nothing but Poetry. He said, that was a Pity; because, let it be ever so excellent, Genius was seldom rewarded, or encouraged; I very gayly repeated the Dean's Lines:

What Hope of Custom in the Fair,
When not a Soul demands the Ware?
When you have nothing to produce,
For private Life, or public Use.
Swift's Rhapfody.

His Grace could not avoid smiling, as his plainly perceived by the Chearfulness, and Freedom of my Behaviour, and by my only saying, Sir, to him, that I was ignorant of his Dignity. But the Entrance of his Relation, a well-bred Lady, of about sifty Years of Age, who, as his Grace is a Batchelor, managed his domestic Affairs, threw me into inconceivable Confusion, as I then plainly perceived I had been very samiliarly chatting with so great a Man.

I made my Apology in the best Manner I could; and, as he was truly sensible that I neither intended or meant Disrespect to him, he easily pardoned me: But, as we drank Tea, said, he wished my Mistake had but continued a little longer, that he might have had the Pleasure of hearing me unawed and uncontrolled. Il own I was quite abashed at so odd a Circumstance, for while I imagined his Grace to be perhaps a Chaplain to the Lord Archbishop of York, I said any thing without Reserve; but, of a sudden, found my Spirits sail, which brought Shakespear's Lines into my Mind:

And what have Kings, that Privates have not too,

Save Ceremony, general Ceremony?

And what are thou, thou Idol Ceremony?

What kind of God art thou, that sufferest

more

Of mortal Griefs, than do thy Worshippers;

What are thy Rents? What are thy Comings in?

Ob Ceremony! shew me but thy Worth: What is thy Soul of Adoration?

Art thou aught else, but Place, Degree, and Form:

Creating Fear and Awe in other Men? Wherein thou art less happy, being fear'd, Than they in fearing thee.

His Grace was fo humane, to make me handsome Present at my Departure, and assured me, he would always be a friend to me.

However, I did not make a fecond Aplication to him, 'till fuch Time as the loyal Bounty is to be petitioned for, which is at Christmas, though it is not distributed 'till Easter. As I knew, at that Season of the Year, it was impossible for me to be at Kensington, e'er his Grace would be at Westminster, I waited at the Door of the Robing-Room, 'till I was almost frozen, holding a Petition, inclosed in a Letter, in my Hand; a Gentleman, who is Doorkeeper to the House of Lords, taking Compassion on me, told me, I had better come into the Lobby, an Offer I readily accepted of, and fat down in a Window: There were feveral Noblemen, most of whom knew me by Sight, walking in it, as the House was not yet met. The first Prelate who entered, was the Lord Bishop of Norwich, a venerable Gentleman, whose graceful grey Hairs the Hand of Time had filvered: As he past by, I made him a Courtefy, on which he stopt, and, with great Civility, asked me if that Letter was for him; I answered, it was for his Grace of York; on which, he very kindly wished me Success. His Grace next entered, and with his wonted Goodness asked me, where I had been? Adding, that it had been a great Loss to me, that he did not know where to find me; and accepting of my Letter, said, he hoped I had there given him a proper Direction; so bowing, as fast as I courtesied, he went to take his Seat at the Right Hand of that Power he had so nobly supported; and, no doubt, will, at the last great Day, having truly approved himself Christ's faithful Soldier and Champion, sighting under the sacred Banners of the Captain of his Salvation, hear those comfortable Words, Well done, thou good and faithful Servant, enter thou into the Joy of thy Lord.

been

As the Earl of Ch—fter—ld heard every Word his Grace spoke to me, he made himself very merry at White's, telling Mr. Cibber, and Colonel D—nc—be, that I was true to the Gown, and delivered a Billet-doux to the handsomest, politest, and bravest Prelate in Europe; that I had given him a Direction where to find me, and highly applauded my Choice.

But no Virtue is above the Reach of a little pleafant Raillery; and as some of the Noblemen demanded an Explanation of this Affair, I with my usual Sincerity, told them the Truth; on which they all agreed in praising his Beneficence and Affability, and the handsome Manner in which he bestowed his Bounties.

I hope, if these Memoirs should ever fall into his Grace's Hands, who is an universal Reader, he will pardon me for using his Name, which I shall never do, but with the utmost Respect and Gratitude.

As I had imagined his Grace to be Lord High Almoner, I addressed him as such, and waited on him again at West-minster; his Grace told me, the B—p of S—y had been so kind to accept of my Petition, and that I must wait on him the next Morning, at his House in the Temple: So accordingly, I went, in sull Spirits, imagining, on the Recommendation of so excellent a Person, I should both have a civil Reception, and also my Desire answered.

It snowed very fast, and I knocked several Times, e'er I could gain Admission; at length, an old Porter ventured to thrn the unoiled Hinges a little, which grated grated very harshly, and seemed to partake of the Spirit of their unhospitable Master, who, according to my Countryman's Bull, opened the Door to keep the People out, for this was fully verified here; he asked me, what I knocked so often for? and being, I suppose, doubtful that I might steal one of the Oak Chairs in the Hall, shut it again in my Face; t þ the Inclemency of the Air, and the Vexation of my Mind, made me give a thundering Rap, the Door was once more opened, and I affured the Porter, if he would be so kind as to deliver that Letter f for me to his Lord, to whom I was recommended by his Grace of York, I would give him Half a Crown, which Promise of a Perquisite softened him into Consent, for, as Mr. Gay observes,

ľ

٠

7

9

This Reason with all is prevailing.

He took the Letter into the Parlour, when presently an old Man, with a most unprelatical Countenance, for it was full of Carbunckles, and Knobs, and Flames of

D 3

Fire, came out, with my Letter in his Hand, and, with an imperious Voice, demanded of me, whether I wrote it? As the Times were full of Violence and Blood, it being, as I observed, at the Beginning of the late Rebellion, I stood confounded, and knew not what Answer to make; which he observing, asked me, was my Name Meade? To which, an: fwering in the affirmative, he cried, "Yow " are a Foreigner, and we have Beggars "enow of our own:" "No, my Lord, " returned I, I was born in Ireland, which " is not a foreign Country, but equally a Part of his Majesty's Dominions with "Great-Britain:" "Why, faid he very " politely, you lye; but as you fay you " are in Distress, there's Half a Crown " for yow:" I thanked his Lordship and turning to the Porter told him, as had given him fome Trouble, I hoped had would accept of that Part of the Roya Bounty, which had been promifed to me his Lordship was pleased to tell me, I wa a faucy, proud, impertinent Person; which having having neither any farther Hopes or Fears about him, I little regarded.

All the Way Home, as cold as it was, and as much vexed as I was at the old Br—te's Behaviour, I could not avoid laughing at his odd Figure, fo much refembling that of the Spanish Friar, where

His great Belly swaggered in State before bim, and bis little gouty Legs came limping after; oh, he is a buge Tun of Divinity! and were he any way given to Holiness, I would swear by his Face; my Oath should be, By this Fire; but he is indeed, but for the Fire in his Face, the Son of utter Darkness; oh! he is a perpetual Triumph, an everlasting Bonsire!

Then again I thought of Dr. Swift's Lines:

G—d d—n me, they bid us reform and repent;

But, Z—ds, by their Looks, they never keep Lent.

D 3

I hope the Reader will pardon me, for inferting Oaths, as I have so great an Authority to quote for them. As the Parliament did not fit during the Holydays, I waited on his Grace of York, who immediately gave me Audience: He asked me, what Success I had with the Lord Almoner; and as I had sped marvellous ill-favouredly, I related every Circumstance, as near as I could remember of our Conversation; One, in particular, which I before omitted, and was, that he faid, "Would the Lord Arch-" bishop of York speak to yow, Woman?" His Grace smiled, and faid, "It was the first " Time he ever learned it was beneath the "Dignity of a Bishop to speak, even to a " Beggar; as Humliity was their best Orna-"ment: - Well, What more?" "Not "much, my Lord, only he demanded,

"If I knew no other Person, besides

"your Grace, to recommend me to him!

"And as I really was convinced, I had " brought him my Credentials from the "highest, I did not use any other Name:"

By

By this Time the Lady before-mentioned came to Breakfast, and I was obliged to relate the Story to her; they both laughed, and his Grace affured me, the B—p of S—y was a very honest Man; ——I told him, "I did " not suspect him to be a Pick-pocket; " but that I looked on that to be but a very moderate Praise, where every " other focial and Christian Virtue was " required:" He faid, I made nice Diftinctions; but he himself would take Care of the Affair, and fo he put a couple of Guineas into my Hand, on which, I faid, "God Almighty bless your Grace;" which again made him smile, and myself also, on Reflection, that, instead of imploring his Bleffing, I had given him mine. I returned to London, as I ought also from this long Digression, to relate what passed between me, and the Noblemen, whom Colonel D-nc-be faid would come and visit me.

When I expected three, but one came, a very old gouty Gentleman, whose Name I do not think proper to insert; the rest had had intended me the fame Favour; but he infifted, it feems, on coming alone, which, after a little Raillery, they permitted him to do; but protested, that if he stayed long, they would follow him ;though our Conversation was entirely about indifferent Matters, during an Hour he stayed with me, yet he and I were as heartily bantered, and I had as many Exminations about his Behaviour to me, as if he had been a young, gay, gallant Gentleman; the Reason of which was, that he used to reprove others for their Intemperance, or Indecency: So they took it into their Heads he was a fly Sinner, and would have bribed me highly to tell a Lye of him; I affured them, provided they would but give me leave to inform him of it, I would fay what they pleafed; for I was fully of Opinion, that, if a Lye would do me Grace, he would permit me to gild it with the happiest Terms I had.

They told my Story to the good old Gentleman, who kindly fent me over three Guineas, by the Hand of my honoured

Benefactor Mr. Cibber.

I was at this Time applied to, by Mr. $V-\mathcal{E}t-r$, to write an Ode on the Princess of Wales's Birth-Day, which, as he kept a Tea-Warehouse in Pall-Mall, near her Court, would, he faid, at least, gain him her Royal Highness's Custom; so to oblige him, as I had really done when he was in very low Circumstances in Ireland, fome Years before, I wrote as follows:

An ODE on the Birth-Day of her Royal Highness the Princess of WALES. Intended for Music.

IGHT of the World, with purest Beams adorn

The Front of Heav'n, and gild the facred Morn !

> Come from thy Chamber, in the East, In richest Gold, and Purple, drest,

Bright, as the Royal Fair, who on this Day was born.

Say, in all thy glorious Round,

Hast thou so much Beauty sound?

Tho' Nature spreads, for Thee, her Charms,

Her fairest Store of finish'd Forms,

The radiant Gem, the flow'ry Race,
Hast thou beheld such perfect Grace,
As Great Augusta's Looks display?
Blooming as rosy Spring, and fair assearly Day.

AIR.

Glad Zephyrs on your downy Pinions bear

The joyful Tidings thro' the balmy Air, That Heav'n, indulgent to Britannia's Isle, Created for her lov'd, her God-like Heir

This matchless Virgin, this illustrious Fair,

In whom the Virtues, and the Graces fmile.

What Joy, oh Royal Youth! was

When You beheld the Nymph Divine! Like Venus, rifing from the Sea, While round officious Cupids play; Neptune confess'd, his Breast before So rich a Treasure never bore; He hush'd the noisy Winds to sleep, And smooth'd the Surface of the Deep.

Hymen;

Hymen, quick, thy Taper light, Join, whom Love before had join'd, And in blissful Bonds unite Heart to Heart, and Mind to Mind, The nobleft Pair, that, ever yet, In fweet connubial Transports met!

AIR.

As when the Sun awakes the Year,
And bids the Blooms their Sweets difclose,

In vernal Lustre, rob'd appear
The Lilly, and the new-blown Rose;
So, from this pure, this hallow'd Flame,
Behold the num'rous Offspring rise,
Of suture Bards the blissful Theme,
And Rapture of a Nation's Eyes.

Let Hymns of Praise to Heav'n ascend,
For this propitious Store,
Oh, still the Royal Race defend!
And Britain asks no more.

What Success this met, I know not; but Mr. $V-\mathcal{E}t-r$ soon after applied to me for a Lilliputian Ode, on the Birthday of his Royal Highness Prince George, which I gave him as follows:

Muses speak,
Clothe the Spring,
Touch the String,
Cupids sport,
Round the Court,
Like the Prince,
Charms dispense,
Whose early Ray,

Gives Britain Promise of resplendent Day.

The flow'ry Prime,
Delights a Time,
The hopeful Bloom,
Sheds rich Perfume,
Then Fruits appear,
To crown the Year;
So, lovely Boy,
Thy Spring employ,
That thy sweet Youth

Be crown'd with Fruits of Wisdom, Virtue, Truth.

Ye,

Ye, to whose Care, Britannia's Heir Is now consign'd, To form his Mind; O to your Trust, Be firmly just; Let Flatt'ry ne'er Insect his Ear, So shall he be Worthy to rule a People, Brave and Free.

Oft let him trace
His God-like Race!
Their noble Story,
Inspiring Glory!
His Parents Eyes,
With glad Surprize,
Shall view a Son,
Worthy their Throne,
And Albion bless

The Royal Progeny's desir'd Increase,

I know not what Reward the Gentleman got for these, but he gave me five Shillings; and as since my Return to *Ire*land, he was twice so civil to write me Word, I was a Fool; I must insist on it, he was a much greater, to apply to a Fool for Wit.

And, if he disputes these Facts, let him but finish the Comedy of Le Paisan Parvenu in the same Stile I wrote the first Act for him, and I will own myself to be the Dunce, he so freely calls me.

I must here observe, that the following Poem, written when I first went to London, which he undertook to have printed for me, he very modestly assured every Person was of his own Composition.

A View of the present State of MEN and THINGS.

A Satyric Dialogue between the Poet and his Friend.

In the Year 1739.

F. TRITING a Satire? P. If I should, what then?

F. 'Tis the most dang'rous Province of the Pen;

Ex-

Example more Discretion ought to teach, Examples move beyond what Prelates preach:

Be warn'd, my Friend, -write Satire! pray desist,

You see what Fate attends the * Satirist.

P. If honest Satire, these licentious Times,

Is look'd on as the worst of human Crimes.

If all are Libellers, who dare proclaim

The Fraud of Courts, or brand a guilty Name:

The Muse, sworn Friend to Truth, with Fear effays

To scourge the Base, or give the Virtuous Praise:

Tho' these the wholesome Means, by Heav'n affign'd

To awe the Vile, or raise the worthy Mind.

F. Yes Panegyric may be fafely writ.

P. It may, if Bards will prostitute their Wit.

64 MEMOIRS of

To varnish Faults, or gild a Knave's Deceit,

Or prove a Title makes a Villain great;
But Virtue plac'd, in its Meridian Light, Hurts the weak Eye, and pains the Courtier's Sight;

Thus shou'd the Muse a Patriot's Worth proclaim,

And crown her Stanhope with undying Fame,

They take Offence, and think you thus descant,

To shew Mankind the Qualities they want.

F. Trust me, their Rashness merits no Excuse,

That fall from Satire into groß Abuse; Vice may be sham'd by proper Ridicule, But where's the Wit of calling Dunce and Fool?

P. Was it not Truth? F. Admit it e'er fo true,

Compassion was to human Weakness due; When Crimes are wanting Anger to provoke,

An Aim at Greatness seems an envious.

Stroke:

Some:

Some, like Drawcansir, fall on Friend, and Foe,

And no Distinction in their Fury know.

With decent Care, Scurrility avoid;

Secure in Praise, your Pen may be em-

And ev'ry gen'rous Pleafure full enjoy'd. J. P. Well; if Encomiums Approbation gain,

For once, I'll try the Panegyric Strain.

Bleft be the Man, whose independent Mind,

No Ties but those of sacred Honour bind;

Whose ample Fortune ev'ry Good supplies,

Sought by the Just, the temperately Wise; Oeconomy his Freedom's best Support,

Sets him above Temptation from a Court;

No Bribe he takes, that Freedom to controul,

No Pension, to enslave his nobler Soul;

He fcorns to fill a Statesman's servise Train,

And looks on high-plac'd Guilt with just Disdain; For

For Him, the Muse shall strike the founding String,

And Fame, her ever-verdant Laurels bring.

Unlike Favonius, who, with ev'ry Vice, Ruin'd a princely Fortune in a trice; His Indigence foon taught him to repair

To Court, — for Bankrupt Peers find Shelter there:

He bows to W——e, whispers to his Grace,

Then humbly begs a Pension, or a Place; The Pension's your's, my Lord, — but mind — this Note,

'Tis but a short Direction, how to vote.

Hard Terms! but Luxury must be supply'd,

He fells his Virtue to support his Pride!

F. Softly, my Friend,—you quit the Task assign'd,

Which, to the Praise of Merit, was confin'd:

Bold Truths, like thefe, a Punishment may bring,

Incense a M-r, perhaps a-

P. As, in a Picture, Light is to be shewn But by the Force, and Strength of Shade alone;

So Virtue's radiant Lustre shines most clear,

When Vice, by Contrast, makes her Charms appear.

Who fees a Burleigh, in Eliza's Reign,

With Britain's Thunder, shake the Realms of Spain,

And, truly zealous in his Country's Cause, Protect her Trade, her Liberty, her Laws; Who, but must kindle into honest Rage! And curse the ——— F. Hold, — this partial Wrath assuage;

Do you consider, what a Risque you run, Or, are you resolute to be undone?

At Courts you rail, at Courts you take Offence,

Unmindful of the Good deriv'd from thence.

P. 'Tis true, from thence proceeds the Royal Youth,

The God-like Friend of Liberty, and Truth;

The purest Bounty of indulgent Heav'n, In FREDERICK's Virtues is to Albion given;

Muse! at that Name, exalt thy tuneful Voice,

And glory in thy elevated Choice.

Patron of Learning! Cherisher of Arts!

Fix'd is thy Empire in our grateful Hearts;

Already we the blissful Scene survey,

While Hope, prophetic, paints thy future Sway;

Honour, the Guardian of thy Throne shall stand,

And Plenty pour her Treasures thro' the Land;

Free, on the Wings of Winds, our Ships fhall roam,

And fafely bring their far-fought Riches Home;

Wide o'er the World, Britannia's Fame shall spread,

And pale Iberia fink with guilty Dread.

Who now — F. Nay pause, — Check your advent'rous Strain,

P. Then guess the rest. F. I do, alas! too plain.

- P. Jugurtha, for his Crimes, arraign'd at Rome,
- The Senate brib'd, and went triumphant Home;
- Yet, on it's Pride, cast back a scornful Eye,
- And wish'd some Merchant wou'd the Nation buy.
- F. Is the Man mad, to ramble wildly thus!
- What has Jugurtha, pray, to do with us?
- P. Faith, nothing; but the Story struck my Mind,
- Tho' it no Application here can find; For shou'd feducing Gold so far prevail,
- To fet a Nation's Liberty to Sale;
- No trading Purchaser can Britain sear,
- Our Merchants Poverty fecures us here.
- F. Why will you bring fuch Scenes to public View?
- Come, come, your Scheme of praising Worth pursue.
- P. No Power of Verse can Virtue's Merit raise:
- Who can add Lustre to it's Noon-tide Blaze; See

See it, from STAIR, break forth with Rays Divine,

And round the learned Head of STAN-HOPE shine;

From Cobham's Mind, we hail it's beauteous Beams,

And CARTERET kindles with it's hallow'd Flames;

While W——E turns, aftonish'd, from the Sight,

And sickens at the pure æthereal Light;, Or, vainly hopes it's Absence to supply,

By glitt'ring Star, and String of azure Dye;

Those Ornaments, which grace the Goodl and Brave,

To sharper Ridicule—expose the Slave:

Statesmen, like Meteors, vulgar earthborn Things,

Rais'd by the strong attracting Force of Kings;

Splendid they shine, in Fortune's Summer-Sky,

Till, falling, all their short-liv'd Glories die;

But Worth, like the refulgent Orb of Day,

Shall unexhaufted Excellence display.

F. Relapfing still! P. When I conceal the Name,

I, sure, a vicious Character may blame.

F. No; Malice may that Character apply.

P. Then Malice makes the Libel, Friend, not I;

But, see, to Praise I tune the golden Lyre,

Strains, worthy PITT, coelestial Muse infpire!

In whom, with Wonder, and Delight, we find,

To blooming Youth, experienc'd Wifdom join'd;

What forceful Reason! manly Eloquence!

Adorn'd Him in his Country's dear Defence?

When, dauntless, 'midst the Murmurs of a Crowd,

He own'd the Cause of Liberty aloud;

Th' intrepid * Angel, thus unshaken, stood

'Midst faithless Numbers, eminently good.

F.

- F. What! yet again? P. Nay, under this Restraint,
- The Verse must languish, and Description faint.
- F. Believe me, Friend, my Care is kindly meant,
- Prudence, and Caution, num'rous Ille prevent.
- P. For once, uninterrupted, let me speak
- Nor, thus, each Period with your Cautions break:
- Where did I stop? F. With Pitt. P
 Then let the Song
- To LITTLETON, the Muse's Friend, belong;
- Born, in each polish'd Science to excell,
- As fam'd for fpeaking, as for writing well;
- Distinguish'd Pair! with purest Manners grac'd!
- High in your Royal Master's Favour plac'd;
- That Blifs, supreme, doth bounteout Fate prepare
- For gen'rous Minds, that make Mankind their Care.

Ye noble Few, who, in a shameless Age,

Dare bring heroic Virtue on the Stage;

Behold, where Heav'n-born Fame confpicuous stands!

Unfading Laurels fill her facred Hands!

Emblems of undecaying, fresh Renown,

Prepar'd your ever-honour'd Heads to crown:

These Wreaths be your's, from whence true Greatness springs;

Ch, look on Coronets as meaner Things!

See, in the hostile Field, for this Reward,

Fearless Argyle each Danger disregard;
Argyle, by ev'ry worthy Mind ador'd!
Whose Oratory conquers like his Sword;

His Country's drooping Genius born to raife,

And warm, anew, her cold declining Days;

Vol. II. E With

MEMOIRS of

74

With him, ye Patriot Sons! unite your Force,

And stem Corruption in it's headlong Course;

See, wide it spreads! and, in it's fable Wave,

What Prelates bathe! what Stars and Garters lave?

There may they fink, fince Lethe-like, it's Stream

Hath banish'd from their Hearts the Love of Fame;

While Wrongs, and Infults, shamefully are borne;

Our Fleet's a Jest, our Name a Word of Scorn.

F. What means this Madness, will you ne'er give o'er?

Those Evils you complain of are no more; Prudence, and Mercy, in well-govern'd

State's,

Prevent the Ruin wasteful War creates;

Those healing Arts have vainly been apply'd,

Now diff'rent Counfels in their Turn preside;

Ar-

Array'd in Terror, see Britannia rise, And hurl vindictive Thunder thro' the Skies!

Bent to chastise the Insolence of Spain; And re-assume her Empire o'er the Main: View all things in a clear impartial Light, And Reason shall confess these Measures right;

Cease then to censure, that which merits
Praise,

And, timely, stop your keen satyric Lays;

E'er frowning Pow'r assimes the awful Nod,

And shews the Terror of it's Iron Rod.

P. A good Intention is the best Desence,
True Fortitude proceeds from Innocence;
Let Gallie Slaves despotic Pow'r obey,
Justice and Liberty in Albion sway: Secure from Danger, may the Muse in-fpire

Her free-born Sons with ancient Roman

Fire;
Such, as of old, in Cato's shone confest,

And lives in Carteret, and in *Ta'bot's*Breaft;

Oh, may the heavenly Flame dispel our Fears,

Re-kindle Hope, and dry Britannia's Tears!

And fince, from the Great, I have digressed to the Vulgar; I cannot forget Dr. Ow-ns, whom, at the End of my First Volume, I promised to record, and fcorn to deal in Lyes, as he did. This pious Divine, who was an intimate Acquaintance of my Father's, gave himself the Trouble of coming to my Landlord, Mr. R-ly, an Officer of Mace, in Michael's-Lane, a little while after I was parted from my Husband, together with his Curate, Mr. R-b-n, and, with great Humanity, infifted on his turning me out of the House, otherwise they would present it: The Landlord asked, what I had done? They answered, I was an excommunicated Person, -(a Lye;) that I had run away from my Husband, (another Lye;) -that fince I had left him, I had feven Bastards, which was pretty quick, as we had been but seven Months asunder, -

Vano-

(another Lye;)—but when a Churchman is in for it, he will out-lye the Devil; at length, these Parsons descended so low, as to threaten to inform, that my Landlord's Wise was a Roman, which I believe, was another Lye; but, whether true, or false, it was very unbecoming their Characters, either as Gentlemen, or Christians, to say.

But I was to be insulted at any Rate; for the Clergy hang together; and if some did, it would be no great Loss.

For when a fwinging Sin is to be committed, there is nothing like a Gown and a Caffock to cover it.

But once more to return to Albion. I had laid out a Couple of Guineas on a little curious Picture, which I bought to fell again, but was advifed to prefent it to the Lord Almoner, who, they faid, had a Tafte for Painting? He generously acceepted of my Favour, but neither made me any Return from his own Bounty, nor his Majesty's; so I had no great Reason to say, he deserved the Character of an honest Man.

On the Change of the Ministry, I wrote the following Lines:

To the Rt. Hon. HENRY PELHAM, Esq;

AMIDST contending Parties Strife for Sway,

Eager to rule, reluctant to obey;

How just, how noble, must his Conduct feem!

Whom all unite to honour, and esteem?
This blissful Fate, this Happiness divine,

Has Heaven referv'd to crown a Life, like Thine:

This the Reward sublimer Virtues claim, Unenvy'd Honours, and unspotted Fame! Integrity in fairest Light confess'd, Lives in the sacred Centre of thy Breast; Oh, never, never, from her Laws depart! So, reign, confess'd, the Friend of ev'ry Heart;

Fix'd on her folid Base, thy Worth shall stand,

And Briton's bless thy delegated Hand:

Mrs. PILKINGTON, 79

Ev'n restless Faction shall ensure thy Peace,

And only Heav'n thy Happiness increase.

I shewed these Lines to Mr. Cibber, who liked them so well, that he undertook to deliver them for me.

The next Morning, early, he did so, and then call'd upon me, and, giving me five Guineas, asked me, whether I thought them a sufficient Reward for my Poetry? I told him, I readily did: Well then, said he, Mr. Pelbam distinguished thus: "There are Five Guineas, for the Lady's Numbers; and Five more, for the good Advice they contain; and tell her, I hope God will always give me Grace to follow it."

There was a Statesman! when comes such another?

Not feeing Mr. Cibber for a Fortnight after this Instance of his Friendship and Humanity, I wrote to him the following Lines:

E 4

To Mr. CIBBER.

SINCE You became so great a Stranger,
My Muse, and Life, have been in Danger;

Consider, both on You depend,
As their inspiring, faithful Friend;
And, shou'd your guardian Care decrease,
Their animating Fires must cease;
Since Novelties alone delight you,
I've found a Method to excite you;
A Scheme, untry'd before to move you,
'Tis plainly to confess, I love you;
Now, look not with Surprize, or Coldness,

Nor call this Declaration Boldness;
For mine's a Flame divinely pure,
For ever fitted to endure;
From ev'ry groffer Thought refin'd,
A Love for your accomplish'd Mind.

Mr. Cibber sent me Word, he was going to the Masquerade; but would see me next Day, which gave rise to the sollowing Lines:

To COLLEY CIBBER, E/q;

A N now a Masquerade delight you?
What are it's Charms that can invite you?

Have not your Eyes to Age survey'd
The medley World in Masquerade?
Where Friendship's Masque conceals the Knave,

And Cowards wear the Masque of Brave;
The Masque of Love, we frail Ones find
Worn, when our Ruin is design'd;
The Patriot's Masque conceals Sedition,
And soft Humility's, Ambition; Ev'n you, sometimes, the Masque will wear,

And, what you are not, oft appear;
Rally your Faults with Wit, and Spirit,
And make your Folly masque your Merit:
Come undisguis'd then, come reveal'd
To me, and Truth; let Folly yield,
And leave the Masque to Fools conceal'd.

Mr. Cibber received these Lines with his usual Partiality to me and my Performances. E 5 And

And here, it may not be amis to give a particular Character of this Gentleman, as no Man has ever been more fatyrized, or less deserved it.

And, I think, I cannot do it, in a better Manner, than I have used in describing Dr. Swift; that is, to give him to my Readers in his Words, and Actions, as near as I can recollect them, during the Time I had the Honour of being known to him: And if the petry Scribblers should fay, that I never knew him, any more than I did the Dean of St. Patrick's;why they only take away Merit from me with one Hand, to give it to me with the other; and must, at least, afford me the Praise of inventing with Probability: that I have not Drawn Bears in Water, Dolphins in the Trees.

But am uniform in my Characters, and Paint Achilles as Achilles was.

As I have mentioned a poetical Introduction to this Gentleman's Favour, I must give a particular Account of his first Visit: He ran up Stairs with the Vivacity of a Youth of Fifteen, and, making me a courtly Bow, faid, he was fure I did not known him; I answered,

Not to know him, would argue myself unknown.

And, prithee, said he, why did not

" you come to my House the Moment " you came to London?" " Upon my Word, Sir, that would have been a modest Proof of Irish Assurance; how "could I hope for a Reception?" "Pshaw, said he, Merit is a sufficient "Recommendation to me." I cour-"tested, and, as we both stood, "Sit co down, faid he, be less ceremonious to " be better bred; come, shew me your "Writings." I obeyed; and, upon his reading the Poem, called Sarrow, he burit into Tears, and was not ashamed to give the flowing Virtue manly Wav; he defired a Copy of it, which I gave him; F. 6 and and now his Curiofity was raifed, to know who I was? I told him, mine was a long, and mournful Story, unfit for a Soul for humanized as his,

Where dwelt the pitying Pang, the tender Tear,

The Sigh for suffiring Worth, the Wish preferred

For Humankind, the Joy to see them blest,

And all the social Offspring of the Heart.

Mr. Cibber affured me, my fine Compliment should not excuse me; for he was fully determined to have my History from my own Lips; and desired I might come and breakfast with him next Morning, and begin.

Accordingly, I waited on him, and wonderfully was he delighted with my Account of Dr. Swift; he had the Patience to liften to me three Hours, without ever once interrupting me; a most uncommon Instance of good Breeding, especially from a Person of his Years, who usually usually dictate to the Company, and engross all the Talk to themselves: For, as Dr. Young observes,

A Dearth of Words a Woman need not fear;

But 'tis a Task, indeed, to learn to hear!
In that the Skill of Conversation lies,
'Tis that must prove you both polite and wise.

And I do affure my Readers, the Gentleman neither yawned, fcratched his Head, beat Tatoo with his Foot, nor used any such ambiguous Giving-out, to note that he was weary.

So far from it, that the he was engaged to dine with the Duke of Gr-ft-n, he had forgot it, 'till his Servant came in, to drefs him; he strictly charged me to come to him the next Morning, and set my Spout a going, for so he merrily called my Mouth.

I obeyed his most kind Command; and, by way of Introduction, told him a Story,

Story Dr Swift related to me, which was as follows:

A Gentleman met a Friend in the Street, whom he had not feen for fome Years; he began to give him an Account of what had befallen him, fince their Separation from each other; a Cart happened to intervene, upon which, they took different Streets; seven Years past, and it so befel, they met just in the same Place, when, without the least Ceremony, he proceeded in his Story, "And, as I was telling you, faid he," &c.

I was going to proceed, when Mr. Cibber interrupted me. I was, faid he. at the Duke of R-cbm-nd's last Summer, when his Daughter, a most accomplished young Lady, and a very early Rifer, fat reading in a beautiful Portico, about Six in the Morning; I accosted the fair Creature, and asked her the Subject of her Contemplation? So in a most elegant, and agreeable Stile, she related to me Part of a very entertaining Novel, she held in her Hand, and, I believe, in better Words than the Author wrote it. A Summons to Breakfast broke off her most greeable Narration.

The next Morning I saw the Charmer n the same Portico, who took up the Story at the very Word she had broke off, and concluded it.

As Ireland is now graced with this illustrious Fair One, in whom Virtue, Beauty, Modesty, Taste, and every Excellence unite, I hope for her Pardon, for presuning to mention her.

And tho', as she will soon see her noole Father was a beneficent Patron to me; I hate Flattery so much, that I would not, on that Account, pay her a Compliment beyond what was due to her elevated Staion, did not her superior Virtues command t.

Never yet were seen a more tender, or a more lovely Pair than the Duke and Dutchess of Richmond, with their blooming Progeny, like new-blown Roses, smiling around them; an Instance, Wedlock may be happy, even among the Great, when mutual Love, and mutual Honour join.

Here Love his golden Shafts employs here lights

His constant Lamp, and waves his purple Wings;

Reigns here, and revels!

And, it is with infinite Pleasure I learn; that Lord and Lady Kildare are as great an Example in conjugal Fidelity, Piety; and Generosity, as their noble Parents.

This Digression, I am certain, will be excused.

I went on with my Story to Mr. Cibber, who, at last, in flowing Spirits, cried! "Z——ds! write it out, just as you relate it, and, I'll engage it will fell."

Every Poem, as I occasionally introduced them, he made me give him a Copy of, and communicated them to the Earl of Chestersield, who positively insisted on it, that I must understand Greek, and Latin, otherwise I never could write English so well. Mr. Cibber said, he had not enquired, but that he would that Moment: And, accordingly, came, and told ne, what my Lord had faid; I affured im, I was ignorant of every Language, xcept my Mother-tongue; but that if he vould be so kind to present my Respects o his Lordship, and let him know, that Dr. Swift had taught me English, I was ertain, he would allow, I had an excelent Tutor; to which his Lordship readily equiesced.

But, alas! though my Honours were very great, my Profits were very fmall. The difmal Return of Summer, for fo it vas to me, robbed me of every Friend; ind, as I could not take up with mean Company, I was as folitary in London as he Pelican in the Wilderness. I acquainted Dr. T-rnbull with my melancholy Sitution, and prevailed on him to write to Mr. P—n, to remit to me what was due, on the Agreement between us. About ten Days after, the Post - man brought a Letter, marked from Dublin, to the Doctor; he happened to be at Kenington, fo I paid for it; and knowing he had no Acquaintance in Ireland, I ventured tured to open it; it was wrote in a Text-Hand, the Contents of it were as follow:

SIR,

Note Absence of my Client, Mr P——, I received your Letter; and he would have you to know, the Woman, you mention, is not his Wise nor has he any thing to say to the infamous Wretch; she fled from Ireland, where she ought to have been executed, for killing her Father, three of her Bastards, and poisoning her Husband. It does not become a Clergyman to countenance a common Prostitute; if she owes you any Money, you may put her in Jail; for I do assure you, it will never be paid by Mr. P——n.

I am,

Sir, Your's,

J. WALSH.

Coulc

Could one believe that any thing less in infernal Malice could have forged the an Accusation against an innocent rson? My very Blood thrilled with orror, to think there could be such a onster of my Species; I am sure he

Shou'd never pray more, abandon all Remorse

On Horrors Head, Horrors accumulate,
Do Deeds to make Heaven weep, all
Earth amaz'd;

Far nothing can be to Damnation add, Greater than this.

Tho' I was far from the least Appreon that the evil Facts I was charged with,
to killing all my Family, would meet ith any Credit; yet Mr. P———n's enying me to be his Wife, and the Dearation that I was not intitled to any ning from him might hurt mine; I supressed the Letter for a Day or two, 'tillarning, by Accident, that the Lord Binop of Kilmore, now Lord Archbishop of Tuam (to whose Family my Father had I Honour of being Physician, and to whi Humanity I am infinitely indebted, which with the utmost Respect, and Gratitude, take this public Opportunity of acknow ledging) was in London; I took the I berty of addressing myself to him, as I Daughter of a Gentleman, whom I w sensible his Lordship regarded; my A plication was not in vain, for though that Day set out for Ireland, he not on fent me a handsome Present, but gave in so genteel, so polite a Manner, wi his Compliments, that it added tenfo Weight to his Favour.

When my Lord's Gentleman came me, Providence so ordered, that II I—bull was drinking Coffee with mand upon this Encouragement of a Prelate taking Compassion on my lost Estate; ventured to communicate to him M Walsh's Letter; the Doctor listed up I Hands and Eyes to Heaven, and seems as much shocked at the Persidiousness the Wretch, as I had been; for whoev wrote the Letter, it was certainly done to the present them with a Letter I reved from Ireland, and communicated to present Primate, who knows it was a forged, but a genuine One.

MADAM,

Beg pardon for giving you this Trouble, though whether it can be any to u, I know not, having been so often asted by him, who ought to have the best use of Knowledge, that you were long ce dead; but, to my great Surprize, I is informed by a Gentleman of Distinct, lately come from London, that he wyou, that you were very well, and red in St. James's Street.

The Cause of my Writing to you may modd, but this it is.

Mr. P——n has, for fome Time past, id his Addresses to a young Lady, who the Daughter of my most intimate Friend.

Friend, to whom I have often heard his with repeated Oaths, not only confin your Death, but that also of his to younger Children—the latter is alreadound to be a base Falsehood; and shou it appear that he has attempted to impose a greater on us, there is no Penalty t Law can inslict, which he shall not sifer, nor shall my Resentment ever less or abate, as he has justly merited it.

I beg, Madam, if you yet exift, y will favour me with an Answer, and me know whether there were any Terr of Agreement between you and M. P.——n, on your Separation; and affured neither Money nor Friends she wanting to support your Interest; a though I have not the Pleasure of beiknown to you, you will find a re Friend in

DAVID LAMBER

Direct to me at the Globe Coffee-Hou Dublin.

I answered this Letter the Moment I recired it, which was three Weeks after te Date, and never heard of the Gentlean more, nor know I whether he exists, not.

And as Mr. P - n has, fince my leturn to Ireland, accused me of atmpti g to injure him with the Primates, he stiles them; I fairly own I sent Mr. Pais's Letter to the late Lord Primate loadly, and Mr. Lamberi's Letter to the resent Lord Primate, (who, as he says in s most stupid Epistle, scorned to counteince me;) and gave him my Letter, and by List of Subscribers also, with full lower to do to them what he pleased: Ind, truly Mr. Parson, so do I; but if neiher the Lord Lieutenant, nor any of the riscipal Persons of Distinction in this lingdom, who have honoured me with heir Regard, should be willing to bear an nfult from you, how can you help yourelf? Why, Man, we are in a Protestant Courtry, and disdain to be Priest-ridden.

Finding myself unable to pay so high a Rent as I stood at, I discharged my Lodging Lodging and Servant, and went to boan and lodge at a very genteel House i Green-street, Grosvenor-Square; my Landlord was Valet de Chambre to the Earl of Stair, and his Wife a top Laundres which, in London, is a very profitable Employment.

As she washed for several Persons of Distinction, she used, on a Sunday, to invite the Head-Servants of Noblemen's Families to Dinner, at which, I never too Umbrage; for you are sure from them the learn every Circumstance relating to the Lords and Ladies; and many entertaining Stories of their particular Humours and Gallantries, did I learn; so true is it, the either good or evil Fame proceeds from our Domestics; and no Wonder, as the have a better Opportunity than the rest of the World, to watch our unguarded Hour and comment on our Frailties.

Amongst others, Sir John Ligonier Gentleman, as they stilled him, which Name, his generous Master soon after entitled him to, by giving him a Commission, dined with us; he looked very a tentivel on, by telling my Landlady, she had, to is Knowledge, a Gentlewoman Lodger.

After Dinner, my Landlord brought in large Bowl of Punch, Pipes and Tobacco, pon which I made my Exit.

I had not long been in my Dressing-Room, which opened into a very sweet Jarden, when Mr. Parkinson, for so was his Person called, followed me. He told ne, he hated Drink and Tobacco, and would be infinitely obliged to me for a Dish of Tea, which, as my Curiosity was raised by the Words he had let drop at Dinner, I readily consented to give him.

He had, he told me, frequently seen me in Stephen's-Green, and was in Dublin at the Time of my Separation from my Husband, and that Numbers of People lamented my hard Fate. I told him I had not found it so, for that I could not even get what was due to me from thence, nor an Answer to any Letter I ever wrote.

He then asked me, how I got any Support; especially, as he had learned from the Family, that I lived very retired; I in-Vol. II. F genuously genuously told him, I had no other For tune than my Pen, and, at his Request fliewed him some of my Writings; h told me his Master delighted in Poetry and was one of the most generous Gentle men living, and that he was certain, if I applied to him, he would be a Friend to me: I was eafily prevailed on to write to him, to beg he would do me the Honour of subscribing to me, and sent him such of my Rhymes as I myself had the best Opinion of. The General wrote me a very polite Answer, and, as he lived but a few Doors from my Lodging, gave me, the next Evening, the Honour of a Visit.

This Gentleman is so universally known, beloved, honoured, and esteemed, that I dare not attempt his Character, being assured my best Painting would fall insinitely short of the excellent Original. Nor was I at all surprized that he should be a Favourite of the Fair, who was adorned with Honour, Generosity, Valour, and yet even Female Sostness, and Complacency, added to the Charms of a most graceful and majestic Person.

And

And if in an advanced Age he shone so rightly, what must he have done in his arst Bloom, when

His kindling Cheeks, with purple Beauties glow'd,

His lovely sparkling Eyes shot martial Fires;

Dreadful as Mars, and as his Venus charming.

dare fay, half the Ladies would have ried out with Phædra.

O God-like Form! O Extasy, and Transport!

This worthy Gentleman subscribed to me or Twelve Books, and also engaged the te Duke of Argyle, the Earl of Stair, ne Lord Cobbam, and several other English Noblemen, to do me the same Hoour.

So the Almighty raised me Friends, ven in a strange Land; and proved my Iusband, tho' a Priest, no Prophet, who declared I should starve; to which, indeed his best Endeavours have not been wanting,

But, he should have remembered the Words of holy David: I have been young and now am old, yet never saw I the Righ teous Man forsaken, nor bis Seed begging their Bread.

My dear Father had, by his many good Works, entailed a Bleffing on my honel Endeavours; and as Mr. Cibber used to fay, when I wrote any thing that please him, "The Gift of the great God to you " preserves you;" which, as I never fold nor prostituted it to unworthy Ends, humbly hope his Mercy will afford to me as long as I have any Being.

This timely Affiftance enabled me no only to live, but to pursue my writing which no Person can ever do well, while their Minds are, like Martha's, trouble with many Things.

A few Days after this, a very gente pretty Woman, took a Lodging in th same House with me: She was wil Child, and her Husband was, as she said a Lawyer, and was gone the Circuit; findin inding the City not agree with her, she noved to better Air. As she had very good Furniture, my Landlady made no cruple to accept of her without farther Enquiry; and I was well pleased to think, should have an agreeable Companion.

Her Manner of Life greatly surprized ne; for, in two Months Time, she never once went abroad, nor did any human Creature come to visit her.

At length, about two o'Clock one Morning, a Gentleman came, who, she he said, was her Husband; she let him n herself, and he lest her early in the Morning, so that none of the Family saw im; he repeated his nocturnal Visits several Times, after the same Manner, in the Dead still, and Middle of the Night, which appeared to me rather to wear the Face of an Amour, than lawful Matrinony.

At length, the Gentleman failed in his Attendance, and the Lady faid, he was zone into the Country.

The Nightly Knocking at the Door did cease,

The noiseless Hammer rusted there in Peace.

Some Weeks past over without either a Message, or a Letter, coming from the supposed Husband, upon which she sel into a deep Melancholy; which, though she seemed to attribute to her Apprehents from of the approaching Hour, I could easily perceive had some more secret and latent Cause.

And as in my Life I had never seen a more retired, or modest Person, I had the utmost Compassion for her, and judged, if the was among the Number of the Unfortunate, some uncommon Villainy has been practised against her.

As we were very intimate, I frequently furprized her in Tears; and, at last, ventured to beg her to acquaint me with the Cause of her Affliction, assuring her it was not an impertinent Female Curiosity which urged me on, but a real Desire to be ferviceable to her, which, perhaps, by ome Means or other, Providence might point out.

She burst into Tears, and fondly empracing me, told me, she wanted a Friend to unbosom herself to, and added, that if I would be her Bedsellow that Night, she would relate to me her unhappy Story.

Wished for Night came, and my fair

Friend kept her Promise.

I am, faid she, the Daughter of an eminent Merchant, who by his extraordinary good Nature, in being Surety for others, hospitable Spirit, and very great Losses at Sea, was obliged to live in a more narrow Dompass than suited the Generosity of his Mind; my Mother dying when I was but welve Years of Age, my Father made me Mistress of the House, which he said would teach me to be an Œconomist, and o know how to govern one of my own. When I was about fourteen Years of Age, a wealthy Packer, a very handfome Man, courted me; my Father ingenuously old him, he could give him but five hun-F 4 dred dred Pounds, with which, if he was fatisfied, and, that I had no Objection to it he should be very glad to have him for Son-in-law.

104 MEMOIRS of

Mr. H—rn—l, for fo was he called affured him he would gladly take mi without a Portion, but my Father infifted on his Acceptance of it, as it would help to furnish a House.

Whatever may be thought at St. James's those who converse with the Traders of London, will find, they neither want Sens nor Politeness; and I liked Mr. Howell, that I was very glad of being shappily disposed of.

My Husband took a House common dious for his Business, and for four Years during which Time I had four Childrens we lived in great Harmony.

But, in the mean Time, I had the Milfortune of losing my dear Father, who let the little Remainder of his Fortune, as Portion for my younger Sister, and appointed my Husband to be her Guardian.

One Day he told me, he was afraid he should not be able to keep such good

Houn

Hours as he had done, being chosen as Member of the Philosophic Club; in which were many Gentlemen of Distinction, whose Acquaintance it was greatly as Interest to cultivate, and to whom it was an Honour to be known, so he hoped to would not give me any Uneasiness: I inswered, he had always been so indulgent to me, I must be ungrateful, indeed, to take Offence, or be uneasy at any thing he was pleased to do; he seemed transported with my Answer, kissed me, and aid, I was the best Wise living. Little did I think what Villainy he was perpetraing against me.

He now stayed out several Nights enirely, and, if he came at all, it was note till Four or Five in the Morning, which, being unacquainted with Jealousy, gave me to other Concern, than the Fear that Irregularities might prejudice his Health; but have often been surprized at his coming Home so sober, and that he did not appear drowsy, after such long watching.

One Morning, in particular, he no coner entered, but he called for his Riding Drefs, and told hie, he was going with a Gentleman into the Country, for a few Days; so giving me his Purse, in which were forty Guineas, he defired I would carefully observe his Business, in which I was now a pretty good Proficient.

Three Months Time elapsed, and, tho' I wrote to him, according to his own Direction, I never received an Answer.

I was now filled with the most gloomy Apprehensions; one Time concluding he had been murdered; a thousand Fears presented themselves to my Imagination, 'till lost and bewildered, I could fix on nothing: My Friends perfuaded me to advertise him, which accordingly I did.

Some Days after, a very well dreft young Gentleman defired to fee me; I shewed him into the Parlour, where he demanded of me, whether I was Mr. H----l's Wife? I said, yes; upon which, to my great Surprize, he asked me, could I prove it? I affured him I could: "That is all I want, Madam:" I begged 'he would explain those dark Speeches, inafmuch as they quite terrified me: "Madam, said he, my Name is "L—ck—y, I have a good Estate, and "am newly called to the Bar; your Huse" band has inveigled away my Sister, and "married her; she is under Age, and has "fifteen thousand Pounds to her Fortune; "she shall prove her Marriage; and, if "you do not prove your prior one, what "can the World think of you?"

I was so astonished at this Account, that I fainted away;——the Gentleman called the Servants to my Assistance, and stayed by me 'till I came to myself; the Agonies I felt, are only known to those who have truly and tenderly loved: dreadful Alternative! either to prosecute a beloved Husband to Death, or be myself deemed an infamous Woman?

Here the poor Creature had so renewed her own Anguish, and so awakened all my Woes, that our Eyes streamed social, and mingled their sympathetic Waters; 'till, insensibly, the dewy-feathered Sleep closed up our Eye-lids.

F 6

I longed as much for the next Night, as the Sultan, in The Arabian Nights Entertainment, did to hear the charming Scherazade's fine Stories; at length it came, and the Lady proceeded.

I begged a Day or two to confider or so important an Affair, and also to comfult with my Friends, what was most adviseable for me to do, and then I would return a positive Answer; so, having an Uncle in Bond-street, I sent my Houshold Furniture there: Dear Madam, said I what did you do with your Children! Oh, returned she, I never had one that lived above a few Days. That, faid I was happy. I think fo now, faid she though I did not then. I told my Uncle all my mournful Story, who advised me by all Means, to vindicate myself; and not fall a Prey to fo consummate : Villain.

I stayed with my Uncle, who was a Widower; my Sister married, and Mr. H——— would not pay her her Fortune, as she had not asked his Consent;

My

My Uncle would not permit either a Leter, or a Message to be delivered to me, out kept me a perfect Prisoner; howver, there was a young Lady in the Veighbourhood, whom he had fome Inlination to marry, and whom he frejuently brought, as a Companion, to reieve my folitary Hours.

One Evening the infifted on my coming o drink Tea with her, my Uncle urged ne to it; I went. Judge of my Surprize! when I found there my Husband's Mother nd Sister all drowned in Tears; they old me, he was confined in Newgate, nad taken the Prison-Fever, and declared ne could not die in Peace, unless he faw ne.

I loved too well to refuse his Request, spon which they immediately hurried me into a Coach; and there indeed he was; the Lawyer had arraigned him for his Life, and he must take his Trial.

He looked so dejected, and seemed so sincerely penitent, and I, alas! so fincerely loved him, that I even confented to stay. with him in his Confinement; he acknowledged ledged his Fault; but very artfully infinuated, that it did not proceed from any Change in his Affection, but that his Circumstances were fo distressed, that he had no other Means to retrieve them; that his Death could be of no Service to me; that I knew myself to be his lawful Wife; that he would always fupport me; in short, he used every tiender and prevailing Argument to keep me from appearing against him, and, Heaven knows, I had no Inclination to do it.

When his Trial-Day came, his fecond Wife fully proved her Marriage to him; but, like the real Mother, I chose to give her all, fooner than divide him, fo she riumphed over me; and, as I had given up the Cause, none of my Friends would give me any Affiftance. I am now in the oddest Situation imaginable; even a kept Mistress to my own Husband; for, upon no other Terms, would he give me any Relief; nor do I know whether to stile myself innocent or guilty for my Condescension to him.

THE B. STORESTER SPECIAL LANDS

As my Tenderness for him made me pear in a bad Light to the World, ever ady to censure even our best Actions; I re not in my present Condition, let any erson, who knows me, see me, lest they ould think of me worse than I deserve—have had no Supply from him for a nsiderable Time; he has prohibited my siting to him at his House; and now, ar Madam, advise me what to do.

There was something so peculiarly unppy in this poor Creature's Fate, that it ight puzzle a wiser Head than mine to mply with her Request; I considered it ery way without being able to form any heme for her Relief.

At length, she told me, he kept an Ofte on Ludgate-Hill, (where he was always be found at Nine) in the Morning, as s second Wife was too fine a Lady to ar one in the House; she imagined, if could see him, I might work on his ompassion; I readily consented to do y thing which might be serviceable to be, and rising early next Morning, she gave me a Letter to him, which I pro mised not to deliver, but into his own Hand.

Accordingly, I fet out on my Embaffy and found the Gentleman, fuch as she had described him, a polite, handsome Man of above thirty Years of Age; he wa alone, and received me very civilly: presented the Letter, but seemed ignoran of the Contents; I could eafily perceive h was much disturbed; however, with marvellous Affurance, he faid, he could not give Charity to every Body; that h had often assisted that unfortunate Person that she ought to work for her Bread, a many of her Betters did, and a Number o fuch inhuman Speeches, common on thof Occasions. I told him her present Condi tions did not enable her to perform any but Needle-work, and that he who pu her into it should support her; he asked me what I meant? Nothing but Honesty if a Man gets a Child he ought to take care of it. What, faid he, would you have me father a Baftard? She could not am fure, have One by you; and would lot, I am convinced, have One by any Body else. He bade me explain myself; told him, he perfectly understood me, nd therefore it was not necessary; but hat if he pleased, I would tell Mrs. H-1 he second, of his Midnight Visits to his Wife. The Wretch feemed confounded, nd feeing I knew him fo well, thought he had best be quiet, especially as a Genleman came in, before whom he did not care to be exposed; so he called me to the Staircase, and putting a Couple of Guineas nto my Hand, faid aloud, Madam, I hall take care, and mind your Directions; I begged he would, and so we parted: But, I am well convinced, it was Fear, not Love, that made him fend her even that Trifle.

E TO PARTY THE

This unhappy Lady died a few Hours after she was brought to Bed, the Infant also died; and I hope, though her Husband, by her Lenity, once escaped a Halter, justly due to him, he has, by this Time, inherited it, for I would have such Offenders so cut off.

114 MEMOIRS of

I grew fo melancholy at the Loss (my Companion, that I did not even care for writing, but amused myself entirel with reading; and my not having a L brary of my own, made me a constal Customer to a Shop in the Neighbour hood, where they hired out Books by th Quarter; this brought me into an Ac quaintance with the Perfons who kept i fenfible, well-bred People: One Day received a Letter from Mrs. Ryves, fo that was their Name, that she had some ver agreeable Friends with her, and that the wanted a Hand at Quadrille, so she hope I would be of their Party; I was ver glad of any Recreation, and as they live but in Brook-Street, directly went. I wa shewn into a Parlour, where fat an ol Man, whom I knew to be a Grub-Street Writer, and a young Gentleman in a ver plain Drefs, whom I also supposed to b in the same Class; they were playing Crib bage for a Farthing a Game, and, instead of Counters, scored with Chalk; they had also an Ale-house Por, with some Porte

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 115

it, standing by them, and the Room helled strong of Tobacco; from these ppearances, I conceived a very contemptible Opinion of the Company, and would have retired, had I known how do it civilly; but, as at my Entrance, had told Mrs. Ryves, I was entirely diffegaged that Evening, I could by no leans get off; and could only hope for me little Amusement, by hearing what tose Underlings in Arts and Sciences light have to say;

For ev'ry Object of Creation

May furnish Hints for Contemplation.

The Scene, however, was changed, the isagreeable Part of the Decoration resolved, and a Quadrille Table introduced. The younger Gentleman proposed our laying for Nothing: "Pshaw, faid I, then we shall all cheat;" "I would no more do that, said he, than give a Vote against my Country."—This surprised me; I told him, I hoped, as he expressed such a Spirit of Patriotism, he had a Seat in the House: He said, he had the Honour of representing the ancient Cit of Canterbury; that his Father was Ad miral Rooke, and that he was married t the Sister of the Lord Guilford Dudley, Lady unmatched in Wit, and Beauty: told him, I was glad to find one Person Distinction, who was not assamed to d Justice to the Merits of his Lady: " " should be a Scoundrel, said he to refun it; she gave me the Preference to) " Man of a much larger Fortune, 1 " whom her Friends had destined her " an Obligation never to be forgot by " grateful Spirit." This Gentleman ha fuch an uncommon generous way of think ing, that, instead of minding the Game, was quite attentive to him, which he of ferving, faid, "Take away the Card "they are only fit to amuse such as as " incapable of tasting a more rations " Entertainment."

I was very glad of this;—the old Scrib bler walked into the Shop, to recreate him If with Tobacco, and Porter; and Mrs. wves went to get us some Chat-inspiring liquor, Green Tea.

I told Mr. Rooke, if I had been any my wanting in Respect to him, I hoped I would attribute it to my Ignorance of Is Station, and the Company, and Situaon I found him in.

He affured me, I had committed no Iffence, nor did he believe it was in my l'ature: But, said he, as you have relarked on the Company, you must know y Wife and Lord 5—thw—ll's Sifters ent this Morning to Greenwich: I had me Business which prevented my waiting them; when that was over, I went to 1ount-Street Coffee-House, in order to pick o fome Company to dine with me, and nding none, I asked the old Man, who fused me, as Mrs. Ryves had engaged im; I told him, I would go dine with im; - as I had, in the Shop, read your pology for the Minister, I was greatly urprised to hear it was the Product of a lady's Pen; when I seemed to question it, they proposed sending for you, which being very agreeable to me, was imme diately done; so, Madam, this is the Hill tory of the Day.

I thanked the Gentleman, for his Con plaifance in relating it.

The Tea put him into such high Spirit that he, finding me a Sort of a Politiciar told me many entertaining Stories abou Sir Rob—t W——le's various Schemes t have always the Majority of the House o his Side; of which, as many as I can re collect that were humorous, I present in Readers with.

The First was this: One Sir Cl-a M-cd-l, a Scots Baronet, without Foot of Estate, was returned duly elected for what Shire I have forgot; however he came to London, took a Hackney Coach, and drove to Sir Rob-t's; the Servants said, he was engaged; but S Cl-dy infifted on his carrying up h Name, and, lest he should forget it, h jumped out of the Coach, and, running up Stairs after him, delivered his Embass huself. Sir Rob—t welcomed him, and, the a Courtier, told him, he should be gid to serve him: "Nay, nay, Mon, returned he, I came na here for Compliments; I ha ne Siller to get a Lodg-ling, so I'll e'en stay here till you give me some:" So Sir Rob—t chose to gre him his Purse, rather than be plagued with his Impertinence.

The Earl of P--rb--h, a Penfiner, told Sir Rob-t, he was always at a Loss how to vote, inasmuch as he did by understand the Debates,—and was so har sighted, that when the House divided, he knew not of which Side to go:—Sir hb-t bade him always follow the Bilops. It happened, on the Convention Sheme, three or four of the Bishops rose, and the Earl seeing them move, he, acarding to his Master's Direction, sollowed tem, and voted point-blank against his solutions.

Mr. Rooke, feeing how much I was

120 MEMOIRS of

A Scots Peer, who was also a Perfioner, and a remarkable fat Man, can one Morning, according to Custom, to S Rob—t's Levee, and, without the lea Ceremony, laid hold of his Ribbon; S Rob—t could not readily disengage hin self, and the Nobleman lugged him the Window, in which, sousing his self down, he happened to have an Escap which carried with it so loud a Report hat it threw the whole Company in Laughter.

Very well, my Lord, said the Minister pray what have you farther to say?

"Why, this it is, Sir Rob—t, I ou

" Fifteen Hundred Pounds, and by G-

" if you don't give it to me, I'll go t

" morrow to the House, and vote a

"Cording to Conscience." 'Tis to presumed his Demand was complied with private, though laughed at in publics he always voted with Sir Rob—t.

Mr. Rooke finding me attentive, preceded: The late Duke of Wb—ton was Man of infinite Variety, and Humor it the Time of the Discovery of Atterbury's Plot, as they called it, which was broved by decyphering Letters, and toruring the harmless Alphabet into Treason; he Duke saw a Man at the Door of the arliament-House, selling Horn-books; ir Rob-t's Equipage stopped, and the Duke, laying hold of him as he alight, old him, he was surprised he did not send nat Fellow to Newgate, who was felling ich a Libel on the Ministry: "Why, faid Sir Rob-t, my Lord, those are Horn-books;" " Treason, by G-, replied the Duke, as I will convince you;" fo holding him, he ran on,

A stands for an Army, and B for a Bench,

C stands for a Court, and D for a Drench,

E, I won't interpret that,

F stands for gay France, which we hope will not swerve,

And G stands for George,—whom God long preserve,

Vol. II. G P

MEMOIRS of

P stands for the P-x, the Pretendent the Pope,

And R stands for Robin, and Ribbon and Rope!

faid he, pulling him by the blue String the Minister could not help himself, an being naturally of a pacific Temper, too this as quietly as he did G-n-r Cb—cb—li's lying with his W-fe.

As I had never heard the Story, I begged he would relate it: Why, faid he Some Rebert went out very early one Morning to the House; but having forgot son Paper of Importance to the dirty Wor of the Day,—he returned Home for and passing through his Wise's Apartment to his Closet, what should he see, but I serene Spouse and the General in amoro Dalliance—the General, All-Hero he was, jumped out of Bed, and besough Mercy, from, as he supposed; his incensival; but the good Man, resembling Ceto in one Point,

Who, if a Friend or so should chance to need ber.

Would recommend her as a special Breeder.

iid carelesty, " Prithee, what does the Fool mean? you look very warm; get into Bed again, or you'll catch Cold."

Mr. Rooke, feeing me so well diverted ith this Story, proceeded to another: As have, faid he, mentioned the Duke of Vb-rt-n, —— you are to know, he ad an Intrigue with Mrs. P-, now tess of B—; one Morning, as they vere in Bed together, he recollected that e had promised to write a Letter to a riend—so he called for a Pen, Ink, and Paper; but being at a Loss for a Writing-Desk, made the Lady turn up her ofte-s, and dated his Letter from sweet P—ggy P—lt—y's, &c. &c. &c.

Here entered our kind Host, and rought us in a Paper called the Champion, which was a very humorous Piece of Advice to all who went to C-t, to wear hields on their Bu-s; this was so Mal à propos that it raised our Mirth: Sain Mr. Rooke, his M---'s own was in Dan ger the other Night; As how, Sir? Why faid he, Sir Rob-t, not chusing to hu the Kingdom by the K---'s using foreign Commodities, when we had so muc cheaper and better at Home, recon mended to him Miss Sk-rr-t, as a Hand-Maiden; his M—— liked her well, that he invited her to sup with him in the C—tess of γ —b's Apar ment, where growing a little more for of his young Mistress than the old Oil could bear, the arofe, and as the Kleaned over the Table, drew the Chall from under him, and let M—— com fouse to the Ground: Oh, what a Falling off was there! He, all enraged, rose again kicked first the C----s, next his Ha and retired to his Apartment, marvelous distempered with Choler.

Well, Sir, faid I, furely Sir R was a most necessary Servant, that wou even Sir Pandarus of Troy become, an rhat for his own Daughter, to oblige h M--; but an able Politician will tur

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 125

s Hand to any thing, where Profits may crue, and Mr. Gay observes that

In Pimps, and Politicians, The Genius is the same.

Ind yet, who could suspect a Man of his leverence and Station, for the most vile ad servile of all Employments!

Oh fy, said he, don't disgrace so noble Occupation. I affure you, the Knight's complaisance to the General proved the leans of faving his own Life; for, on te Excise Scheme, the People were so censed, that they determined to put him Death, and yet make it feem Chance Medley: Accordingly, as he was going own to St. Stephen's Steps, into our il-Arious S—te-House! one Man pushed Im fo hard that he tumbled on his Face, ad a Number of Persons determined to in over him, and trample him to Death; the General, who was with him, drew Is Sword, and fwore the first who adnced should die on Point of Fox.

No

No body ventured to encounter a Ch—ll. fo the Prime M—fter escaped.

Ah! faid I, that was God's Mercy, and ten Thousand Pities! Faith, said he, and so it was.

Mr. Rooke now began to be a little in quisitive, who I was? I told him more Name was Meade, for by that I always went in London; so that the numerous Stories of Mrs. P——n's being in Taverns, Bagnio's, &c. which my Husban says he can prove, (Mem. he lyes) never appertained to me; but to his own C—si N—y P——n, whose Father live in Pill-Lane,—and who is herself; common a Prostitute as ever traversed the Hundreds of Drury.

I do this to convince him I fcorn rob any of his illustrious Family of the noble Atchievements, and, according the old Proverb, 'Tis but proper to fet to Saddle on the right Horse, or rather Mar for I think she much resembles one.

But to return.

Mr. Rooke asked me, if I was related to Capt. Meade? I told him, he was my Uncle's Son: He said, he was a worthy little Fellow; that he knew him very well, and had made him his Consident in his Amour with his Lady.

Time stole insensibly away with such agreeable Amusement; we sat till the small Hours without Drowsiness, nor did we defire the Aid of Bacchus to keep up our Spirits.

I humbly hope no body will attempt to decypher my Initials; for I do assure them, the great M—— is an innocent Letter, and does not like Mitching, Mallicho, mean Mischief.

I told Mr. Rooke, I was going to publish a Book by Subscription; he said, he was sure it must be good, so he gave me a Guinea, and promised to use his Interest for me.

He told me, he would come and visit me the first Hour he had to spare: I answered, I hoped he would soon find one: Well then, said he, I'll tell you how I pass the Day, and do you find one.

I

I rise about Nine, drink Coffee, not that I like it, but that it gives a Man the Air of a Politician; for the same Reason, I always read the News; then I drefs, and about Twelve, go to the Cocoa-Tree, where I talk Treason; from thence to St. James's Coffee-House, where I praise the Ministry; then to White's where I talk Gallantry; fo by Three I return Home to Dinner; after that, I read about an Hour, and digeft the Book and the Dinner together; then I go the Opera or Play, Vaux-Hall or Ranelagh, according to the Season of the Year; from thence Home to Supper, and about Twelve to Bed.

Description of his passing the Day, and told him he had, by his own Account, three or four Hours to bestow on me, as the Hour he talked Treason, the Hour he was loyal, or the Hour in which he read; "Ay, "faid he, very gaily, or what think you "of the last Hour, wherein I go to Bed?"

I smiled at the Gentleman's whimsical

"Oh, Sir, you are so much better engaged, it would not only be Wickedness,

" but Folly also, to think of that at all."

Well,

Well, depend on it, said he, I'll see you totorrow; so we took Leave for ever, for the very first News I heard next Morning, as, that Mr. Rooke, a little while after he tose, fell down in an Apoplectic Fit, and stantly expired.

I never was more shocked than at his attimely Fate; Heavens! all Wit, Life, d Gaiety at Night, and dead in the lorning! I wept for him as a Friend, and ch, I am sure, he would have been to me, d he lived. I found, by these two mencholy Events, there was nothing serious Mortality; all was but Toys! I frequently collected Dr. Delany's beautiful Lines on him shimself in the Glass:

When I revolve this evanestent State
Of short Duration, and uncertain Date;
My Being, and my Stay dependent state,
Not on my own, but on another's Will;
I ask myself, as I my Fort review,
Which is the real Shadaw of the two?

Mrs. Ryves was also much touched for e Lois of this Gentleman, and, indeed, fo was every body who knew him. She and I went one Afternoon to walk in St. James's Park, but finding myfelf weary, the proposed going to a Physician's House in Westminster, a Widower, and her Relation, where we could get a Dish of Tea, and rest ourselves; I agreed; the Doctor was at Home, and a very polite Gentleman; I found by the Furniture of the Room, he was a Virtuoso, it being adorned with Books, Medals, Paintings, dried Butterslies, and Tomes of Casuistry.

The Dean mentions it as a Praise to Vanessa, that

She, with Address, each Genius held
To that wherein they most excelled;
So making others Wisdom known,
She pleased them, and improved her own.

For no fooner did the Doctor perceive that I knew Mark Anthony from Julius Casar, and Brutus from both, but he related a great Part of the Roman History to me, even from the first Punic War to the Death of Julius.

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 131

My Readers may venture to believe it vas not new to me, who had from my Childhood been, if I may use the Word, persect Devourer of Books; and I sound hem both sweet to the Palate, and nou-ishing Food to the Mind.

It has been observed, as a Piece of rened Policy in Gondamore the Spaniard, nat he used to talk bad Latin to King sames I. who being a Pedant rather than Prince, had so much Pleasure in, as he wought, setting this Machiavel right, that, oblige his Pupil, he complimented him ith the Head of that learned and brave san Sir Walter Raleigh.

I have often successfully practifed the me Art, and gained many Friends by eming to take their Instruction with leasure; to acknowledge their Superiority I Understanding, on which even Fools ride themselves, is, I believe the most elicate way of statering ever yet thought; as Cassus says of Casar,

And when I well him, he hate Flattery,.

He says he does, being then most flattered.

G 6

Very

Very few People are Virtue Proof there, all, like Achilles, have a mortal Heel, and though

Tis an old Maxim in the Schools,
That Flattery's the Food of Fools;
Yet, now and then, your Men of Wit
Will condescend to taste a Bit.

Swift.

I found the good Doctor fallible here, to my great Happiness, as it made him my Friend; and, under God, his Skill and Care soon after saved my Life.

The Gentleman made us stay to Suppersinding when the Wind was in one particular Point, I was as wife as Hamlet, and knew a Hawk from a Handsaw.

At Supper I told him, I was an Amicus a-kin to the Faculty, being a Physician' Daughter, upon which he arose, and said he must salute his Niece; and, that i ever I should fall sick, he claimed the Honour of attending me. We stayed toge ther till-Twelve very chearfully, and the parted in Peace.

I have observed, if my Life had any sunshine, it was but a faint and watery ileam, too soon overcast, for, in a very ew Days, I was feized with a violent Feer; it took me with cold shivering Fits, nd remembering the Doctor's Claim, I ent for him. He had me bled, and ordered ne to go to Bed; I did not fee him till ext Morning, by which time I was quite ght-headed, and crying out for my Chilren; when the Doctor came, I told him e had stolen them from me, and carried nem to Mr. P——n; on this he opened by Bosom, for which I also quarrelled, nd faid he was a very impudent Fellow; he, miling, said, I had a very fair Skin, but hat he was under a Necessity of making ree with it, otherwise he could not answer or my Life; and as, it feems, it was full of purple Spots, he ordered a large Blister or my Back, and one for each Arm; what past for some Days, in which, they were renewed, I know not, being quite insensible even to Pain; but when the Fever abated, and Reason once more reassumed her Throne, what frail Machines are we, when Sickness can displace her? They assured me, I raved incessantly for my dear little Ones, and fell into such Fits of Crying and Lamentation for them, that it put them in Mind of Rachel mourning for the Loss of her Children, who resused to be comforted, because they were not.

So, as it has been often observed, that there is Truth in Wine, I found there was Truth in Madness, the Cause that hurts the Brain, or the reigning Passion of the Soul then manifests itself, and as my Beloved were evermore present to my Imagination, it was no Wonder that their Names dwelt ever on my Tongue.

When these Things were told me, I, as one newly awakened from Sleep, remembered some wild, disjointed, incoherent Ideas, which had possessed my Soul, even during it's lethargic State; such as, that Mr. P——n was going to offer some violent Injury to our Children, but of what Kind I knew not, it was sled, like the Remembrance of a Guest which tarrieth but a Day. I might have as well have endeavoured to find out the Path which the light Bird had with his Wings beat in the buxom Air, or the Track of a Ship, when with it's crooked Keel, it divides the briny Waves which immediately unite again; or feize old Time, and bid him bring me back one Moment past, as hope to recollect what was for ever lost in Oblivion.

Indeed I have frequently had these supernatural Sollicitings, or a Kind of Indication of whatever was to befal me before t happened: Nay, what is more furprin sing, I have read a History, to me quite new, and it has occurred to me, that I myself nad been some way principally concerned n the most material Transactions of it, ho' they were past a thousand Years.

Had I lived in the Days of Pythagoras, believe I should have been of his Opih lion, and have imagined,

y. '

That all Things are but altered; nothing dies.

And here and there th' unbody'd Spirit ·flies. Nay, Nay, I should have been afraid to kill a Woodcock, lest I should disinherit the Soul of my Grand-dame.

If my Reader thinks me whimfical, let him judge by the Event.

A Woman, (in whose Garden I had once walked in Ireland) the first Day 1 was able to fit up, and very weak I was after so long Sickness, even while my kind Physician was rubbing my Temples with Hungary Water to recover me out of a fainting Fit, rushed into the Room, and without the least Ceremony, cried out, "Do you know what that Villain has "done?" As I neither knew her, nor who the spoke of, I was quite startled, and asked her, who she talked about, or what The meant? "That Villain P——n, " fays she, who has fold your two younger " Children for Slaves to New York:" This was fuch a monstrous Crime I could scarce give any Credit to it; for, even admitting what he had fo cruelly charged me with in Regard to his Bed, was Truth, how had their helpless Innocence offended

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 137

Im? I observed to the Doctor, my Ravings were ominous, and portended some de Calamity.

The Doctor, apprehending this Shock right make me relapse, begged of the Frson who gave it, to retire; which, are several Asseverations, that what she and was Fact, as indeed it was, and that she had brought it out in that Manner to the me, if possible, to prevent their unhappy Fate, she did.

As the Doctor was not only a Man of mellent Understanding, but also of great Fimanity, I told him, as he had been fokid to administer to the Health of my Bdy, he must now, if possible, administer ca Mind diseased; and as it was imposile for him to prescribe Remedies withn knowing the Distemper, and it's Orial, I gave him my Story in a few Nords, and he advised me to write to Illand, to the Rulers, and Bishops, mich I did that very Night; and, proentially, the Letters were delivered Ine enough to prevent the Children oing fold to Slavery—the Affair was enquired enquired into, and Mr. P-n war obliged to refund to the Master of the Kici Ship, the Golden Earnest he had receive as the Price of the Innocent.

What to me was most surprizing, wa that Mr. P-n's Mother was one the Contrivers of this infernal Plot; Grand mothers being usually more indulgent a their Grandchildren than even their Mi thers; but as she who would have made Prey of them is not long fince dead, eve of the Disease that Herod, Peter to Cruel, and other malignant Wretches fe by, I can only bid her adieu, and chan tably hope she has escaped the Judgme of the next World, as it fell on her this.

These Facts are so publickly know that for the Evidence of them I could pr duce even a Cloud of Witnesses, were necessary.

And yet, who that beheld this Ma clad in holy Vesture at the Altar, appear ing like white-robed Innocence, with Ey up-turned to Heaven, could believe hi capable of all Manner of Crimes;

Perjury, Perjury in the highest Degree! Cruelty, Cruelty in the sternest Degree.

He may, indeed, like Richard III. prove simfelf by these to be a Man; who, when is Mother upbraids him with his manifold Acts of savage Tyranny, she says,

No Beast so sierce, but knows some Touch of Pity.

Rich. But I know none, and therefore am no Beast.

And, indeed Mr. P——n may again fay with him, that he has nothing

But the plain Devil, and dissembling.

Looks

To back his Cause.

Ob that Ithuriel's heav'nly temper'd Spear

Would make the Fiend in his own Shape appear,

Or pluck the holy Furr from off his Back, and let the World, for once fee what the Infide of a wicked Priest is made of.

As I received no Account from Ireland, I knew not what to think; fometimes I flattered myself that the Woman had belied him; at other Times, reslecting on his intolerable Barbarity to the poor Creatures, whom Distress alone made me leave immured within his inhospitable Walls, too rough a Cradle for my pretty Ones my very Heart died within me, and I am as well assured, as that I live, that it was not the Fear of God, but the Fear of a Halter, hindered him from embruing his own Hands in their vital Blood.

But, enough of the Wretch, who, if he can disprove me, ought to do it; he attributes his Silence to Contempt of me, but it is well known he neither wants Wit, nor Words, nor Impudence to bring him off: It is strong Conviction, with Prool as full and evident as Day against him, ties up his guilty Tongue.

At length, I thought of writing to I—rf—le, as I had learned he was in Jublin: He wrote me Word, that the hildren were all well; that he had given a Apprentice-Fee with my Daughter to Milliner, and had taken my youngest on to himself; that old Mr. P—n and my Mother were dead, and my last hild, which, being but an Infant, I could not carry to London with me; that I had got a samous offissed Man, and as going to carry him to Paris for a sew, to which Place he earnestly invited to accompany him.

I hoped, by this Letter, that Mr.

n had been wronged, with rerd to the Children under his Care; and b' fome humane Tears fell for the Lofs my Mother and my Child, yet, conleting how defolate they both were, I ened rather than deplored their Fate.

The Child, here mentioued, was that hich Mr. P——n disclaimed, and vised me to leave upon the Parish.

And now I do affure my Readers I was beincerely forry for the Death of old

MEMOIRS of

Mr. P—n, inasmuch as he alway treated me with a fatherly Tenderness, wa excessively fond of my Children, was Man of a great uncultivated Genius; and tho' I have mentioned his keeping a Alehouse, I did not mean it in any Direspect to his Memory; for he was the Son of a Gentleman, tho', by various Mi fortunes, he was reduced to take up so lo an Occupation; but nothing can be just deemed scandalous which is not dishones And, I am well convinced, had he lived he never would have consented to the in human Barbarity of his Son.

Adieu, and take thy Praise with thee Heav'n!

So many melancholy Incidents had be fallen me in this solitary Place, that I determined to change my Lodging; and we recommended by a Stationer's Wise to single Gentlewoman who kept a Milliner Shop in Fleet-street; she was a jolly like Dame, of about Forty, very gay; while deach other so well, that we so nade a Bargain, and, for a few Days, I'vas very well pleased with the Change, as he Variety of that busy Part of London mused my Mind: But I soon found that was got into very bad Hands, and hat my new Landlady was neither better or worse than a mercenary Town Jilt; ho being pretty well known herself, and onsequently despised, wanted something ew to produce to her Customers.

I think I never faw any Person in my life who did not possess one good Quality, accept this Creature; for Woman is a serm too gentle for her, who had not ven Decency to hide her Shame.

To give my Reader a Taste of her leanlines: She told me herself she had ot combed her Head for three Years, which, I believe, was true, because she was not Mistress of a Comb, except when he made free with mine, than which nohing could be more offensive to me, so hat her Hair, tho naturally sine, being juite matted on a filthy Hair-cap, seemed o be a Composition of raw Silk and Moss, uch as I remember to have stolen a Lock of from the Head of Good Duke Hun phrey, at St. Albans, three hundred Yes after his Death: Shifts she had two yellow as Canvas, but they were fleevelef no Matter for that, she fold ready-ma Cambrick Sleeves, and could eafily pin a Pair, for she never took any farth Trouble about them; I think I must 1 the rest refer my Reader to the Lad Dreffing-room, for

In such a Case few Words are best, And Strephon bids us guess the rest.

I really, 'till I faw this Wretch, im gined the Dean had only mustered up the dirty Ideas in the World in one Piece on Purpose to affront the Fair Sex, as used humorously to stile old Beggar-wome and Cinder-Pickers.

This makes me digress to relate a Cor pliment of his to some Ladies, who supp with him, of which I had the Honour be One: The Dean was giving us an A count of some Woman, who, he told t was the nastiest, filthiest, most stinking o

B—ch that ever was yet feen, except the Company! Company that you know is but civil. We all powed; could we do less?

From the Time I had the Misfortune if being her Tenant, she invited every Person she had any Acquaintance with to ee me, as tho' I had been some outlandish Monster, or wonderful Curiofity. Amongst ne rest, she prevailed on the now L-d lh-f J-ft-ce E-e, then a Stuent in Grays-Inn, a fine Gentleman, poically turned, and somewhat too much pon the effeminate or delicate Order to ear whatever was not quite refined, to enture into her Dining-Room, where I t scribbling; I was for retiring, but that as not permitted: The Gentleman, who as dreffed in black Velvet, and had the Air a Person of Distinction, said, he hoped his Visit was intended entirely to me, I buld not be so unkind as to resuse it.

I said, I did not know how I was entited to such an Honour; but since he was peased to bestow it on me, I should with scatitude accept of it. My Hostess, for Vol. II. H that Name, by her Bulk, far above the common Size of Females, she seemed to deserve, prudently left the Stranger and I to ourselves, under Pretence that she must attend her Shop. Mr. E --- e, feeing my Table covered with written Papers, tole me, my Room resembled that of a Law yer, and asked me Leave to read my Contemplations; to which I agreeing, he had the Complaisance to seem entertained when, to my unspeakable Consusion, the Brute returned, and cried, "What wil " you treat the Lady with?" Any thing " fhe chuses," returned he, and seemed a much confounded as I was: "Pray " Madam, what do you like?" " No "thing at prefent, Sir, but what I hav " ordered, some Coffee;" as it was bu Five o'Clock in the Afternoon, and as th Gentleman was remarkable for Sobriet he approved of my Taste: He offered I pay for it; "I told him, I did not fell i " and that he could not more highly ag s grieve me."

My Landlady fent it up, but did no think proper to partake of our Repast, whit

which I was very glad; he looked on me with Eyes of great Compassion, especially as he observed the Tears springing from mine, for indeed I was quite shocked; he's asked me how I became acquainted with a Person so very unlike myself? I told him, I was a Stranger, and knew very little of her: as he gave Credit to my Words, he idvised me to quit her House, affuring ne she was a Procuress, and, as he said, kept a Shop only to difguise her real Occupation.

He had scarce finished his friendly Cauion, when Madam entered again with two very large Lobsters in one Hand, and a Bottle of Wine in the other, she laid a very oul Table Cloth, dressed her Fish, and nvited us to partake; which we refusing, he eat them all herfelf, drank the Bottle f Wine, and very modefly defired the Sentleman to pay for them, to which he cquiesced.

This Scene made us laugh heartily, for he fed with such keen Dispatch, and rank fo often, that she seemed like a tarved Pierot, devouring all before her.

H 2

Her Rage of Hunger being now, as we hoped, suppressed, she once more lest us; and Mr. E——e said, "I hope "you are now convinced, Madam, that, at least, your Reputation will be uncidone, if you continue here:" I answered, It was but too true; but that, at present sent, I saw no Method of Relief, as she she owed me Money, which she never was bashful in borrowing, by which means I was ill provided to remove, and had agreed to take it out in Board and Lodging."

Here Madam once more rushed in, when, to my great Surprize! she asked Mr. E--e, would he give her a roasted Fowl and Sausages for Supper? He told her, after so plentiful a Meal as she had just made, he was sure she did but jest: She affirmed she was in earnest, and that if he would not, there was a Gentleman below that would.

Mr. E—e, who had a Mind to hold more Talk with me, asked me, what Part of the House belonged to me? She answered, with matchless Impudence, a very very good Bed-chamber, which she supposted, we should have no Objection to, as we liked each other so well.

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 149

I feetned not to take the Meaning of her Speech; and not having the least Apprehension of any Incivility being offered to me by a Person of good Breeding, and Humanity; I told the Gentleman, he should be very welcome, if he pleased to walk into it,—as it was on the same Floor; he said, I did him great Honour, and that he would wait on me.

However, to avoid the evil Comments which wicked Persons, judging others by themselves, are ever ready to make, I lest the Door wide open, to the no small Mortification of my Landlady, and her new Guest, as they were obliged to pass by it.

And what should he be but some drunken Swabber or Boatswain! whose Tarpaulin Compliments, of which we heard every Word distinctly, for some time, diverted us; 'till, at last, their Talk became so offensive, that as I had lest the Door open in Point of Decency, I was now on the same.

Account obliged to shut it.

150 MEMOIRS of

The Gentleman once more urged the Necessity of my Departure from this villainous Woman; assuring me, if I would but change my Lodging, and send a Line to him, with a Direction, where to find me, he would do every thing in his Power to serve distressed Merit, as he was please to term it.

And that nothing might be wanting to enable me to do it, he, in a very polite Manner, obliged me to accept of two Guineas, as a Subscription to my Writings.

This ingenious Gentleman entertained me with the Recital of several beautiful poetical Compositions of his own, and finding I was not quite tasteless, but, at least, endeavoured to give them due Praise, he stayed with me 'till Ten o'Clock, no unseasonable Hour, as it was in the Month of June; when, either being hungry himself, or willing to entertain me, he insisted on my Permission to send to the Devil Tavern for some Supper, a Meal I never chuse, but, in Complaisance to my Benefactor, and also as a Means of engaging his further Conversation, which was truly elegant, I, with some Reluctance, submitted to. Our one Maid being gone for the other Bowl of Punch for the Sailor, the Gentleman went and bespoke it himself.

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 151

I could not, in his Absence, but restect how much the unhappy Part of Women disappoint even their own Ends; for when they throw off the Appearance of Modesty, and shew the mercenary Prostitute unveiled, no Man of common Understanding can have the least Regard for them; Mr. Addison observes of some Woman, who kept a noted House of civil Reception, that she said, no Girl was sit, even for her, who was past blushing. Well said the Dean, in the following Lines:

O Decency, cælestial Maid!

Descend from Heaven to Beauty's Aid;

Tho' Beauty may beget Descre,

'Tis thou must fan the Lover's Fire,

To hold him in Delusion still,

And make him fancy what you will.

H.4.

And I do affure my Reader, I did not forget to return Thanks to the Almighty, who had enabled me to live by his Gifts to me; for, fure I am, that I could raise not Money by vile Means;

By Heav'n, I had rather coin my Heart for Gold,

And drop my Blood for Drachma's.

Shakespeare.

Mr. E——e's Return broke off my Contemplation; he had ordered a slight, but elegant Repast, with a Flask of Champaigne; we supped together with great Pleasure, and, except the dissonant and unharmonious Noise made by our Neighbours, who were now got so merry, that they did, what they called, sing; we had no Interruption, but talked of History, Poerry, and every Muse-like Theme; called all the mighty Dead before us, rejudged their Acts, commented on the Works of Milton, Shakespear, Spencer, and all the British Classics.

Refin'd

Refin'd Delight, and fitted to endure! But what can human Happiness secure? Delanv..

The Star, that ushers in the rosy Dawn, began to reassume her Empire o'er the Dusk, and drowfy World; the Bell tolled One, a Signal of Departure to my amiable: Gueft, whose kind Injunctions, in regard to my Removal, I promifed to obey.

The Maid, whom her Mistress half starved, and though she was really her Betters, used so ill, that she down-right hated her, told me that the Sailor and shewere gone to Bed together, both deaddrunk.

And yet this Creature would talk of Virtue, nay, go to Church; but, to fay the Truth, she only went there to pick up a Gallant.

As I was not in the least sleepy, I difmissed the Servant, and

Revolving in my clouded Soul

The various Turns of Things below,

Now and then a Sigh I stole,

And Tears began to flow.

I open'd the Window, looked at the Moon Riding near her highest Noon, Like One, who had been led astray Thro' the Heav'ns wide pathless Way; And oft, as if her Head she bow'd, Stooping thro' a fleecy Cloud.

In short, I was wrapped in a pleasing Fit of Melancholy, and had I been in the Country, midst vernal Airs and Bloom should have attuned my rural Minstrelsy to some high Theme; but, alas! Ease an Retirement, those Friends to the Musever were denied to me, being in a populous City pent amidst the busy Humi Men, obliged to work for daily Brea and often not obtaining even that possible pittance.

Oh! that I could now retire! that for charitable Hand would bestow on my po

Remai

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 155

Remains of Life, even but a Clay Habitation in some sequestered Scene, where,

On ev'ry Thorn delightful Wisdom grows,
In ev'ry Rill a sweet Instruction flows.

How happy should I think myself!

My Readers will, I hope, acknowledge I deal candidly with them, when I not only acquaint them with my Actions, but reveal to them even the inmost Recesses of my Soul as freely as to Heaven.

At length, remembering that Nature requires a Time of Rest, I thought it but meet to indulge the pleasing Heaviness: or, in plainer Language, I went to Bed, and enjoyed the Honey-dew of Sleep, till it was very late in the Day:

It seems the Maid had, on purpose to mortify her Mistress, told her how genteely Mr. E——e had entertained me; which, though she herself had been guilty of such toul Intemperance, and swinish Gluttony, raised her Indignation to such a Height, that she downright affronted me, telling me, I had no Business with her Gallant: Why, said I, sure you had him all to yourself, I did not interfere; for I supposed she meant honest Tar, but, it seems, I was mistaken, for it was Mr. E——e, whom she had so politely dismissed, and whom now she had called a hundred Scrubs; assuring me, she could never make any thing of him, and really I believed her; and by what I then saw of her Temper, I am certain, had she known he had made me a Present, I should not have escaped with out a good Beating.

H.6

Well, said she, at last, I warrant I had a better Chap than your fine Beau; (the was speaking pretty plain) my Man gave me a Crown, and Victuals, and Liquo enough: Now, be sincere, what did the Mr. Maiden give you? For what, said I have nothing to sell; you who keep Shop, and are in the way of Trade, materially dispose of sive Shillings Worth Goods.

The Wretch knew not what Answer to make to me; to acknowledge herself a Prostitute, as I did not seem to think her one, was too vile, even for her, and to have given but the most remote Hint, that she suspected any evil Correspondence between Mr. E——e and me, laid her absolutely at our Mercy.

However, she turned off the Discourse with what Mr. Addison terms a Horse-Laugh, an excellent Expedient to supply the Lack of Brains, and which whoever can secure on their Side, are sure of Victory; for who can stand it, let it be ever so injudiciously bestowed?

This I have very lately experienced, when one W-dw-rd, a Player, got the Laugh against me, who never vied with his superior Excellence, only by saying,

What, shall a Tumbler set me thus adrist, I the Successor of immortal Swift?

Oh that his Words had been true! that he had bequeathed to me the precious Legacy of his Wit and Learning

Or

Or that, when all sublimed, he rose to Heaven,
I had inherited his sacred Mantle;
Then midst the Prophets might I, in Strains

Such as delight the Ear of God, pour forth

But to descend to this terrene Spot: I drest, and wandered forth in quest of a new Lodging; not well knowing this Part of the Town, I past through a very clean Court, all inhabited by Jewellers, and just opposite to the End of it saw on the Window of what they in London call a Twist Shop, a Bill up to let the first Floor The Woman of the House shewed me the Apartment; the Furniture was not only new but rich, and I concluded the Price would be too high for me; but, to my great Surprise, the Woman of the Hous agreed, not only to furnish me with Linen but also with Plate and China for Five Shillings a Week; there was but one In convenience, which was, that there was no Passage into the House, but through th Shop

Shop, to which, if they did not object, I had no Cause. It so fortuned that the Countess of Essex's Woman, whom I had known at the Laundress's before-mentioned, came in, and gave me so high a Character, that we agreed on my taking Possession of my new Apartment the next Day.

I went from this to a Friend's to Dinner, and did not return Home till Ten at Night; but never in my Life was I more highly provoked; for lo! my Landlady and some Fellow or other were in my Bed; the Maid never apprized me of it, being willing to expose her brutal Mistress to the utmost, but shewed me into the Chamber.

I am certain, I was infinitely more ashamed than she was, for she called to me to sit down on the Bed-side; but I hastened out, and, as I could not take up with her Bed, I was obliged to fit up all Night.

Pretty foon in the Morning, a Woman came to fee me; she and I packed up my Clothes, called a Porter, and made him carry them to my new Abode, and, as I hoped never to fee the Wretch again, I did not bid her Adieu.

My Landlord was a Master-Taylor, in very good Circumstances, and his Wife a very sober modest Woman.

I past a Week over very calmly, when remembering my Promise to Mr. E---e, I wrote a Line to him, but, as I did not know what Street I was in, I enquired of my Landlady, who with very great Reluctance, told me, it was Drury-Lane. I was extremely concerned at this Piece of Information, which she observed, and, asfured me, I might enquire into her own, and her Husband's Character; that they had kept their Lodgings empty, fooner than let them to any idle Person, though they could have had a good Price for them; and a great deal more to the same effect; all which, though I did most sted fastly believe, yet I held it no proper Plac for me, of all Persons in the World, to reside in.

Women whose Characters are unble mished, or, who have their Husband wit with them as Guardians to it, may do a housand Things, which those who have allen on evil Days, and evil Tongues, n Prudence must avoid.

I did not directly tell my Landlady that must leave her, being resolved, if posble, not to remove till I could find a Place where I could be fixed.

Accordingly, I once more took my Vay to St. James's, and called upon my ld Landlady there: Her first Floor was t, but the second being tolerably genteel, e, as we had always been on very friendlerms, soon made a Bargain for it, and I as to enter on it as soon as my Week for the other was up. The very Air of St. ames's always pleased me, and indeed I seeived so many Favours from the Nobilit, that I had just Cause to prefer it to any ther Part of London.

This happened to be some public Festivi, which, as I did not recollect, I sat with the good old Gentlewoman till Evenit, when on my return Home, there was aarge Bonsire, and a great Crowd at the Temple-

Temple-Gate; I stopped a little, being stars tled, and not well knowing how to pass by when an old Gentleman very well dreft, ask ed me where I was going? I told him which was Truth, I had mistaken my Way being a Stranger: He faid, if I'd let hin know where I lived, he would wait on n Home; I was almost ashamed to do i yet, confidering they were creditable Pe ple where I lodged, I ventured to infor him. My Landlord happened to be ! Taylor, so he readily conducted me to ! House; the People saluted him, and as ed him for his Lady and Family: Wh faid he, this is one of them, she is a no Relation to my Wife. I was furprized att new Kindred, and could not tell whether old Gentleman spoke Truth or not; thou I could not recollect I had ever seen him fore: yet, as the Landlord treated him w the highest Respect, I thought it not co venient to contradict him, fo I invited I in, and wondered where this would end

My Landlady lighted us up to my I ing-room; he told her, I had dined at

House, and that after so long a Walk I nust needs be dry, and therefore desired here get him a Bottle of Wine, and a Plate Scotch Collops from some particular avern he directed her to.

As I found the old Gentleman did not ick at telling one Lye, I concluded all faid was false, as it really was.

She no sooner departed, but he asked me, hether he was not an able Politician? I id, he was a merry Gentleman, and I hped as I had the Honour of being his busin, he would let me know who he as, lest I should be asked any cross suestions, and our Accounts should vary.

He told me his Name, and where he led; that he had a confiderable Estate, and also a good Employment under the overnment, all of which did not make he happy, because Heaven had not bessed him with a Child.

He then asked me who I was? for he ld, he was fure I had had a good Educion. As I had no reason to doubt of his accrity, I told him my Story, with hich he seemed much affected; and in

Con-

Conclusion, I affured him, I was more unhappy in having Children, from whomin all probability, I was for ever separated than he could be, who never had one.

Here my Landlady brought in Suppeto which he invited her to stay; our Conversation turned on general Topics; it grepretty late, when to my great Astonishment, the Gentleman said, "Cousin, "think you told me, you wanted M"ney, I have a good deal of your's in n"Hands, though not much about me "present; however, here are a couple "Guineas, when you want Fisty you know where to come." Would I did, thoug I, but it was no time for me to resttem.

When he went away, I knew not what to think of this odd Adventure, someting I fancied it was a Dream, and dreaded wake lest the Gold should vanish; the began to flatter myself, that perhaps so Relation had lest me a Legacy; but he ing never since my Distress, received smallest Favour from one of them, I conhardly hope they should now feel any contrast.

punctu

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 165

inctuous Visitings of Nature, who were to me, remorseless as the Sea.

In short, the more I thought, the more lwas perplexed, and could only humbly pe, that the protecting Hand of him 10

-Doth the Raven feed, Yea, providentially catereth for the Sparrow, Affifted me to live for some good End, Best to his Wisdom known.

recommending myself to his paternal e, who had Compassion on my Sors, I went to my Repose.

Early next Morning the Woman of the luse told me, there was a Lady waitfor me in the Dining-room; fo I e, and who should it be, but my late bus Landlady!

Ay Reader may judge how welcome was. She told me there was a Gentlechan waiting for me at her House, who Business of the utmost Consequence, very much to my Advantage to impart to me: Though I scarce gave Cred to her, yet Curiofity made me accompan her Home, where I beheld a marvellor ill-favoured old Woman; her Chin, which had on it a comely black Beard, almo met her Nose, there not being a Tooth i the Way to bar their Union. I am fure had Don Quixote seen her, he would have endeavoured to disenchant her Mustachio' Her Eyes were black and fierce, her Buc nobly prominent, her Drefs tawdry, at take her for all in all, I hope I never the look upon her Like again. I w doubtful whether it was not a Man Woman's Clothes; but if it were a Cre ture of the Feminine Gender, I conclud it must be a Witch, and that the Study the Black Art had made her so hairy abo the Face, that she had need of a Barb But to proceed: She accosted me very villy, in a deep Connaught Brogue, to me she knew all my good Family, a lived in the same Parish with me in Dubli I soon grew tired of her fulsome Flatte to me and them, and defired to know ! Commands; she told me my Lord Gv-y had a great Regard for my Faher, and was very desirous of seeing me, and would be a Friend to me: nd if I would dine with her next Day, he vould meet me: I now began to guess at ny Lady's Occupation, and gave her a point blank D nial; not but that I should have been glad to see his Lordship, as I tnew he had a Regard for my Father; but Woman must appear in a comtemptible Light, when introduced to a Nobleman y one of the Devil's Agents. So I left Madam to her Meditations, and departed, o her no small Discomfort, for it was a gollen Guinea out of her Way; as it feems, ny Lord's Price was two, one of which he presented to Madam Procuress, and the other to the Lady who granted him a Fayour.

This infernal Embassadress had taken on her the Name of Cunningham, being, as the said, ruined by a Gentleman of that Name, who had recommended her to feveral of the Irish Noblemen, as a very necessary Person. Oh how detestable it is to feed a Maw, or clothe a Back by fuci a filthy Vice!

Well, at the appointed Time, I returned to St. James's, and the first Day was there, I was honoured with a Lette from Lord G—lw—y, as follows;

MADAM,

I Thought I had had the Honour of being known to you, but find I hav been imposed upon; if you will permit m to pay my Respects to you this Evening, will unfold this Mystery to you, and an very sincerely,

Madam,

Your most obedient Servant,

G

I returned my Compliments to his Lordship, and gladly excepted of the Honour of his Company.

About Six he came, and related to me the Trick Mrs. Cunningbam had put on him:

him; he told me, he had employed her o find me out, having a Curiofity to fee Person he had so often heard of, both at White's and in Ireland; that the Appointnent was made, and a Lady introduced to im, whom by his Description of her, I tnew to be the odious Mrs. Smith, my hocking Landlady; ---- he faid he vas much disappointed when he saw her, out the Lady was very kind; nay, fo kind hat he could not refist her.

As you stood at your Window this Morning, Colonel D-nc-be asked ne, knowing I was one of the Commisoners of Ireland, whether I knew you? answered, no: --- Why, said he, that a little Irish Muse, a Physician's Daugher, and a Parson's Wife, an eloped one I ave been told, but she won't confess that; n this I asked your Name, the Colonel iid it was Pilkington, but you were usually alled Mrs. Mende; I then found I had een deceived, and wrote immediately to ou.

I told his Lordship, I had the Honou f having many Representatives, which VOL. II. had had been of very great Disadvantage to my Character, inasmuch as they were pretty liberal of their Favours, which were place to my Account, though I knew nothin of the Matter: My Lord said, that we hard; but he hoped, now he had foun the real Mrs. Pilkington, she would not t inexorable. To turn off this Sort of Di courfe, I talked of public Affairs, which put my Lord in the Head of making n pacquet Commissioner Th-mpsthen Candidate in the Election for the City of Y-rk, with old English Rhyme after the Manner of Mother Shipton's Pr phecies, to inform him of the Defeat was to meet with in that Year. I had t good Fortune to divert him with my c mical Stuff so well, that he left me a Tas which was to translate a French Chanson boire; he gave me a couple of Guine and promising to be a frequent Visitor, took his Leave.

I do affure my Readers, I was very gleto be retained as his Lordship's Muse a Secretary, —— an Employment both Honour and Prosit.

I continued in Favour some Time; and bantered half the Nobility, either about eir Love-Intrigues or Parliamentary Afirs, all of which were well known to his ordship, who honoured me with his Conlence and Instruction.

But as all Happiness fades away, an unreseen Accident blasted mine.

My Lord was feized with a Fever, which nfined him some Days; the first Time was able to go Abroad, he wrote me Yord he would pass the Evening with me. bout his appointed Hour, sometody pped at the Dining-room Door, which opened; when, instead of my Lord, ened Colonel D-nc-be and Mr. -nc-r, whom the Colonel preited to me, and made his Exit.

This Nobleman was no more like his Sother than I to Hercules,—for the At Thing he did was to double-lock the Dor, put the Key in his Pocket, and main Strength oblige me to fit on his Niee. I told him I expected Lord G-ly, but that had no Effect, for he fore he should not have Admittance; he faid he was as well entitled to a Lady Favour as any Lord: It was to no Purpo for me to affure him, my Lord nevi asked any but what were consistent with He nour: He gave no Credit to my Word and feeing he had fet me weeping, he fai my Lord was very happy in my Lov but that he was not worthy of it, being Inconstant; but as for me, added he, do not come to pay you one Visit, but make you mine for ever, to raife such N rit above Distress, and to make you happy as I can.

-Sir, returned I, your Goodness deser my Acknowledgment, but your Mean feems doubtful; on what Terms am] receive those Advantages? On the eal and sweetest in the World, said he, g me your Love in return, it is all I wi and running on with Lord Hastin Speech in his Midnight Visit to poor j Shore, he cried,

Be kind, my charming Mistress, to Wishes,

And satisfy my panting Heart with Bec

It was in vain for me to remonstrate that e had a fine young Lady of his own; that was not worth the Pains he took; that I as not handsome: He faid, I pleased im, and that to him was Beauty, which was resolutely determined to possess, if ot by Consent, he would make use of orce.

And truly the Gentleman would foon ive convinced me he was the fronger, id not Lord G-lw-y knocked at e Door; he swore I should not open it: Iy Lord called to me, and faid he would reak the Door open. I begged of Mr. p-nc-r to permit me to let him , and that if he would stay a Moment, I. ould frame some handsome Excuse to disis him.

He gave me the Key and went into the ed-chamber; I opened the Door for ord G—lw—y, who brought with im the Earl of M—dd—x, a fine tentleman; Lord G-lw-y was. ther very angry; or affected to appear fo; ad really I knew not what Apology to m.ke:

make, only to fay I had been afleep. The Noblemen feated themselves, to the no finall Vexation of Mr. Sp-nc-r Lord G—lw—y asked me who was in the Bed-chamber? I faid, Nobody -well, Madam, faid he, I know you are a Lady of Veracity, but for once prefume to doubt it; fo faying, he made to the Door, which stood open, and Mr Sp—nc—r clapped it in his Face doubled-locked it within-fide, and to my great Happiness, went out of another Doo down Stairs; this I was very glad of, be ing apprehensive of a Quarrel. Lord G—lw—y was in a violent Pal fion, and infifted on my telling him wha Fellow, as he called him, affronted him So to fatisfy him, I very ingenuously tole him the whole Story, to the infinite Mirth of Lord M—dd—x, who, I thought would have died with Laughter, for among! other Accidents, I had, in the Fray, lost little Paris Cap I wore, and as my Hai was very thick, never missed it.

But whatever I could fay, would by n Means pacify Lord G - lw - y; h callec alled me twenty ungrateful Devils and Tilts, and I know not what, which furorized me the more, as I never in my Life magined he loved me, and confequently could not form any Idea of his being jeaous; but I suppose, his Pride was piqued. it being locked out, which was the real, Cause of his Resentment.

Lord $M - dd - \alpha$ in vain pleaded my Cause, till at last, an odd Whim of his turned our Tragedy to a Farce.

Lord M—dd—x, it feems, liked in Italian Singer, on whom Lord R---ya. d, a very small Gentleman, with a Mind in Proportion to his diminutive Figure, had wrote a very stupid Satire; he begged of me to write a Love-Letter to him, for he was, it seems, a Man of Gallantry, and his Answer I was to communicate at White's.

As I was a perfect Stranger to his Character, the Nobleman dictated a fine Encomium on his Learning, Wit, Poetry, Beauty, &c. all of which united, had, it feems, made a Conquest of me, unheard, unseen, and made me extremely ambitious of being known to fo accomplished a Nobleman; we also gave him some Poetry, and a Directionwhere to find his most enamoured Nymph. This done, the Letter was dispatched away to Bond-street, and the Messenger brought Word I should have an Answer in the Morning.

I know whoever reads this, may very possibly censure me; but all who are dependant on the Favours of the Great, must comply with their Whimsies; it is enough, if we are so conscientious as not to be made a Slave to their Vices, as R - b - t N - g - t, Esq; civilly asked me to be.

Now, as I have mentioned this Fellow, for such is the Term his Behaviour to me merits, who am in this, in the same Mind with Pope*, That

Worth makes the Man, and want of it the Fellow;

The rest is all but Leather and Prunella.

I hope my Reader will allow me to give them a short Sketch of him, with Regard

to

^{*} I do not mean a Fellow of T. C.D.

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 177

o me, and also, of the Mortification I had he Happiness of giving him.

My Father attended his first Wise, Lady E-ll-a P-k-t, and, I had, I believe, passed twenty Evenings in his Company in Dublin; he had published a foem, written by the Rev. Mr. Sterling, alled Happiness, as his own, and another in his Conversion from Popery, inscribed to W-m P-y, now Earl of B-b, to whose Piety he was indebted for his eing drawn out of Error. This gave me fine Opportunity of paying him a Comliment, which I sent to White's; he sent ne Word he would wait on me that Evening; accordingly he came.

After his first Salutation, he very potely asked me, if I could help him to a V—, telling me, he had married an gly old Devil for Money, whom he ated, and wanted a Girl to take into Leeping, which he depended on my Skill chuse for him: I thanked him for the onourable Employment he recommended me, but affured him, it was not in my ower to serve him, as I never conversed with Women. He told me, he would not be a Friend to me on any other Terms; I said, I was forry for it, so making him a Reverence, I lest the Room He stayed in it some Time, hoping, suppose, I was gone of his Errand, but finding I did not return, he went away but to do him Justice, he lest Half a Guinea on the Table, as a Recompence so the Affront he had given me.

He wanted, it feems, to be admitted a a Member of the Club at White's; the Way of Election is by ballotting, and on black Bean is sufficient to overturn an Man's Pretension to that Honour. I tol my Story so effectually, that they all corcluded him unsit for Society, and as man Friends as he imagined he had among three hundred Nobles, and, as vast a Fortune as his Wise had brought him, he had but one white Bean in the whole Draught.

However, I return him Thanks for h Ten and Sixpence, to shew my Gratitude

But, to return to my little Low R—ym—d. Early next Morning, as was drinking Tea, his Valet de Chamb faid he must speak to me. I desired he might come in; he was a Frenchman, who, contrary to the rest of his Country, was as boorish as an English Farmer; he threw down a Letter on the Table, Dere, my Lord send a you dat; I opened it, and read as follows:

MADAM;

By your Stile you ought to be a Gentlewoman; but I have met with things of this Kind, which did not answer Expectation; I have fent my Man to see you, whom I always trust, and so may you; if he likes you, and you will come where I appoint, (for I never venture to visit any Woman) I will meet you.

I am,

MADAM

Your's,

R-YM-B

While I was perusing this gallant Epistle, the Frenchman looked sharp about; he even opened the Corner Cupboard; then he demanded of me what did I vant with his Lorde? I could not resist my Inclination to laugh, at which he grew choleric, and swore, Garzoon, he should never come; which, I being quite easy about, he went away muttering something.

I fent his Letter, which was wrote in a very bad Hand, and almost every Word missipelt, to Lord M—dd—x, who shewed it to the Company at White's, on whom it took the same Effect it had done on me, for they all laughed heartily at Jack-a-Dandy, a Nick-name Lord M—x had bestowed on him.

These two merry Noblemen, who had set me on this Scheme, would fain have prevailed on me to-send another Letter to fack-a-Dandy, but I told them, I did not approve of a Man, governed by his Man, and one who seemed to be a Coward into the Bargain; Lord M—dd—x then me, Lord R—ym—d had some Reason to be fearful how he made an Assignation, as he had once the Missortune to be taken in by a Billet-doux; and, when he went to the appointed Place, instead of a fine Lady, sound a Couple of sturdy Fellows, who gave him a very good Cudgelling.

This put me in mind of a merry Story told me in London, of Col. C--nn-m, who took Delight in paying his Addresses to young Ladies, merely for Amusement; and no sooner did he perceive he had gained their Affection, but he despised his Conquest.

As the Noblemen knew him, I related one Story to them, out of many, of a pleafant Revenge a forfaken Nymph took on him.

This Lady was of exceeding good Birth, very well accomplished, and of unblemished Reputation, but not of Fortune equal to his; however, he seemed so sond, that she supposed that would be no Obstacle, and inturely devoted herself to the Pleasure of loving him; which he no sooner perceived, but he grew cold, civil, and respectful, and at last went to London, without so much as bidding her Farewel.

They wrote to him a Letter, as from married Dutchess, who was fallen in Low with him at Court; the Chairman had Directions to wait for his Answer, but they took Care that he should not be able to guess who sent it;—all that the Colone could discover was, that it was given to him in the Street, and he was ordered to leave the Answer at a Mercer's, where i would be safe delivered to the Person who wrote the Letter.

This Secrecy made him quite fure he had gained the Heart of some high-born Fair; he failed not to fend a passionate and tender Return for fo great an Honour as the unknown Charmer had done him. The Ladies received it, and were glad to find the Gudgeon swallow the Bait so greedily. Next Night he took care to dress himself with the utmost Magnificence; and, as he is really a graceful Person, he made no doubt but the Lady would, by some favourable Glance, discover herself to him; to this End, he went to Court, and firictly examined the Countenance of every Lady of Quality there to no Purpose, which only made him suppose the Lady extremely discreet, and careful of her Reputation.

His imaginary Mistress made several Appointments with him, then sent him Word, her Lord was come to Town, or some Apology, 'till at last, tired with their Sport, they resolved to finish it.

To this End, he received a Letter, that the Lady could not find out any Place where she could, without Danger of DisHouse, but begged, that he might not let any of his Servants be in the Way; that she would come in a Chair, excelly at Ten, one small Tap at the Door being the Signal for Happiness.

Never did Knight-Errant propose to himself more Glory in the finishing of an Adventure, than did our happy Colonel at his near approaching Bliss; he had framed to himself an Idea of a perfect Beauty, kind, tender, and formed for Love; his Answer was all Rapture, and Acknowledgment.

His Apartments were filled with Wax Lights, himself curled, perfumed, and dressed to such Advantage; who could resist that beheld him? He punctually obeyed the Ladies Commands, in dismissing all the Servants, with Orders not to appear, and waited the happy Minute, with the Impatience of a real Lover; every Moment he looked at his Watch, and thought the Hours, Ages.

At length the long wished for Signal was given, he flew to receive the Fair-one, then a Porter delivered a Band-box into is Hand, and, without speaking a Word him vanished. Never was any Man in reater Consusion than he, at opening it; he here found, not only all his own soft Epistes, but also a little Doll in a Chair, with Letter in her Hand, directed to him, the turport of which, was, to let him know e was a conceited Coxcomb, to suppose my Woman of Quality had the least Reard for him, and, that the Lady who held nat, was a Mistress good enough for him.

The Noblemen thanked me for my Jarration, and wished the Trick had been ut on Jack-a-Dandy, such a Lady being much more suitable Match for him than the Colonel; however, we all agreed, that his was no Tax on the Gentleman's Unerstanding,

Since, let a Man be ne'er so wise, He may be caught, with sober Lyes.

and, that his Appearance might captivate Lady, without any Miracle.

Lord M—dd—x did me the Honour to abscribe, and, assured me, he would prevail

vail on as many of his Friends as he could to do me the same Favour.

Next Day Colonel Duncombe asked me did I know such a Gentleman of Irelance as L—ft—s H——e, Esq; I said I did particularly well, as my Brother and h were inseparable Companions in the College; he told me, there was a Parcel a Letters freed by the Earl Thomond, the just dead, lying for him at White's, and that he should be very glad to see him, I learn some Account of the Particulars a Lord Thomond's Death, with whom he has for many Years a strict Friendship.

As I had learned by Accident whe Mr. H——e lived, I wrote to let hi know what the Colonel faid; he fent na Letter of Thanks, and, that he wou do himself the Honour of meeting the Colonel the next Evening at my Aparment.

It so fortuned that my kind Benefact Mr. Cibber came over with the Colone and a little after came Mr. H——e; h Politeness, and the many pleasing Incidents of our younger Days, gave n infini nfinite Delight, as it was a Proof that I was not an Impostor, and convinced the Auditors I had once been in Esteem, even n my own Country.

After a good deal of agreeable Chat, vherein Mr. H-e took an Opportunity of mentioning his having, when he was in he College, spent his whole Year's Alowance in making one grand Ball; and hat, as on this Occasion, he was in Difgrace with his own Father, he quartered simfelf on mine, praising his elegant maner of living, and the kind Reception he Iways received from him, which as he aid, he must ever acknowledge to his Family; Mr. Cibber faid, he hoped, as I vas the only defolate Person belonging to it, e would be so good as to affift me. He sked, how it was in his Power? Why, eturned he, this poor Lady is obliged topublish her Writings by Subscription, and dare fay, a Gentleman of her own Counry, who has so fine a Fortune, and knows her so many Years, will, at least, be as kind as Strangers have been to her: Without doubt, Sir, said Mr. H-e, it is the Duty of every Gentleman to do it; for rifing, he told me, he was very forry he was under an Engagement to the Duke of Devonshire, but that he would take another Opportunity of paying his Respects to me; which same Opportunity, as he never found in London, I hope he will in Ireland, and have such a Dependance or his Honour, that I am certain, he will keep it, in being my Friend.

As I had the Honour of being once a kind of a Favourite to Alderman Barber. I judged him a very proper Person, both as he had been a Printer, and was also a Man of considerable Interest, to apply to both to increase my Subscription, and to put me into a Method of getting my Wri tings printed as cheap as I could; to thi end, I wrote him a very respectful Letter. but received no Answer; I followed i with a Second, still he was filent; at length I found a Method to make him speak to me, for, recollecting the best Part of very severe Satyr Mr. P—n had wrote wrote on him, I let him know I had it. on which he invited me to his House, received me very kindly, apologized for his Silence, being ill of the Gout, which had hindered him from answering me; and affured me, as foon as he was able to go abroad, he would present me as a Companion to the Dutchess of Buckingham, who had promifed to take one of his Recommendation, and who, he faid, being in the Decline of Life, and having no Children, would, he was certain, if I had the good Fortune to please her, remember me in her Will; but unhappily for me the Alderman died a few Days after, nor did the Dutchess long survive him.

So vanished my Hopes.

A short time after this Disappointment, which sensibly affected me, my Landlady told me, there was an ugly squinting old Fellow, who said he had Business of the utmost Consequence, and must speak to me; I bid her shew him up, and sound he answered her Description; he asked me, was my Name Meade? I said, yes; why then.

then, faid he, I am come to inform you that there is a Legacy of five hundred Pounds left you by one Mr. Clark, who died last Week at St. Edmondsbury, but th Lady I was ordered to inquire for is Mr P-n's Wife; are you the Person? told him the Direction was very right, bu that I neither was related to, nor even ac quainted with any Person of the Name o Clark, from whom I had the smallest Rea fon to hope for such a Favour: Nay Madam, returned he, as you have changed your Name, why may not he? Upon this he shewed me a Letter, to m' 'a cy au thentic, wherein I was defired, ...ving to wait on Counsellor Clark in Essex-Stree in the Strand, who had Orders to pay me the Money, on Proof I was Mrs. Pil kington.

I knew not what to make of all this; was in hopes the fickle Goddess, who i well represented standing on a Wheel, was for once, in a good Humour with me, and was resolved to make me amends for he former Caprice, or, to speak more seriously that the Supreme Almighty Being, tha Power, who

Builds Life on Death, on Change Duration founds,

And gives th' eternal Wheels to know their Rounds, id taken Compassion on my Sufferings.

While I was lost in musing on this odd dventure, the old Fellow asked me very ally, if I would give him my Company Richmond, and take a Dinner with him? told him I never went abroad with Perns I did not know, especially Men; he ld me, he was very capable of being ferceable to me, and that it was also in my ower to be fo to him; in what, Sir? Thy, I have received from Ireland, from our Husband, the Life of Alderman arber, wherein there is an Account of the mours of Cadenus and Vanessa, to which e Alderman was privy, and related them Mr. P-n: Now I have been formed you have fome Letters of the lean's, which may embellish the Work; nd also a true Character of the Alderman, ritten by his Chaplain; I will make you a handsome Consideration for them, if you will give them to me to publish.

This Discourse surprized me almost much as the first; I therefore begged would not hold me any longer in Suspend but let me know who I conversed with He answered his Name was Edmund Culupon which, in spite of Vexation, and to Disappointment of my new-born Hope could not forbear laughing at the significant of the scheme he had laid, to trick me out of a valuable Manuscripts I might possibly profess; so making him a Courtesy, I sa Farewel, Legacy!

I should not trouble the Reader we this Story, but that I have been charge with writing the Life of the Aldermand, as I shall answer it to God, I ne even saw it in my Life, not but Curiol would have engaged me to read it, escally as I heard it was very well wrote but at the Time it was published, I was Prisoner in the Marshalsea, and really I not a Crown to spare for a Book.

As Mr. Curl swore heartily, that Letter, with regard to the Legacy, genuine, I went the next Day to Counfellor Clark; there was indeed an old Gendeman of his name newly dead, at St. Ednonsbury, who had Children and Grandchildren, Heirs at Law, sufficient to interit his Fortune, and, as it happened, he lied intestate.

genui

However I comforted myself that Mr. Turl had not made a Fool of me, as he as done of many a better Writer, and seured me a Prisoner in his poetical Garret, which the ingenious Mr. Fielding charmagly ridicules.

But oh the dismal Summer (which ever as attended with Want and all it's gloomy rain, not only to me, but many Persons ho seem in good Circumstances) lest me nite desolate, and obliged me to take a neaper Lodging, which I did in the souse of one Mrs. Trisoli in Duke-street, I fames's, a most extraordinary painted p, bedizened-out old Woman, whose susband was a German Quack, not then I England, from which, it seems his Vise had obliged him to sly, for robbing tr of a Deed of Settlement he had made to Vol. II.

her at Marriage; but to say the Truth, think that was a Blessing to the poor Mar for she was a very Devil incarnate, un merciful and cruel to the last Degree: dare say, she never in her Life gave eve a Cup of Water or a Morsel of Bread, keep a poor Creature from starving!

Her Custom was to live upon he Lodgers, even when she knew they we desolately poor, inasmuch, that if one them sent but for a Pint of Small-Beer, she would intercept it in the Way, and drie half of it; but indeed she was very cive for she always sent them Word she draw their Healths, and so she did in realit by depriving them of the Means of puferving it.

Being sadly distressed by this avaritie Wretch, I was advised to apply to I Mead, who was a Man of Taste, and he sixty thousand Pounds lest him, to give such Charities as he thought proper. A cordingly I wrote him a moving Tale my Distress, which had so good an Effect that he sent me Word he would wait on thimself the next Day, but not keeping Word, I addrest him in the sollowing Lines:

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 195

To Doctor MEAD.

CARCE was the heavenly Virgin higher blest.

When visited by a coelestial Guest; Tail'd by the glorious Messenger of Grace, And honour'd high above the human Race, scarce stronger Rapture cou'd his Words impart,

Than those which lately extasy'd my Heart, When You, God's noblest Image here below,

Cour honour'd Presence promis'd to bestow; My Hope reviv'd, I wak'd the filent String, The Muse, once more, attun'd her Voice to fing, leas'd, that tho' long deprest by adverse Fate, he yet found Favour with the Good and Great.

nd that her melancholy flowing Strain o Gen'rous Mead was not addrest in vain.

Oh, Thou, the Muses Judge, the Muses Friend!

ly, must those Hopes in Disappointment end;

Must

196 MEMOIRS of

Must ev'ry beauteous, bright Idea sade, And Death enwrap me in his silent Shadel Death, the poor suff'ring Wretch's last Relief, Led in by pale-ey'd Want, and pinin Grief.

Would Heav'n but one affifting Friet fupply!

How quickly might he bid those Sorros fly?

Whose Wisdom cou'd my Industry direct. And as that merited his Aid, protect;
Not thus with endless Application grieve.
And the fooft supported, ne'er reliev'd.

Pardon the bold Presumption of r. Pray'r,

Courage is oft extracted from Despair;
The drowning Wretch struggles for Liawhile,

Nor God; nor Man condemns his anxies
Toil;

But if tempestuous Billows round him rise,

And Heav'n all Pity, all Relief denies, Lost in the Ocean, he forgotten dies.

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 197

I sent these Rhymes to the Doctor, and, in return, was desired to come to his House in Ormand-street, at Four o'Clock that Asternoon.

Now were my Hopes high raised, high as the Spring Tide, to which the Ebb quickly succeeds, as it did with me; I fancied, vainly fancied! at least ten Guineas n my Pocket, and had, like the Man with is Basket of Glasses, turned them into Trade, and purchased in my Mind an easy Subfistence for Life; but I was a little misaken in the Matter, as the Sequel will shew. dreffed myfelf very neatly, and waited on he Doctor; when I knocked at his Door, Footman with his Mouth very fu'l, and Bone in his Hand, opened it, and in an rish Accent, demanded my Business? I old him I wanted to speak to the Doctor: By my own Shoul, said he, my Maishter will not be spoke to by Nobody!" Well en, Friend, if you please to let him now Mrs. Meade is here, I believe he will eak to me: " Mishtrish Maide, replied he, Arah, are you vanting Charity, and taakes up my Maishter's Name to claim K 3 se Kin

"Kin with him; well, stay there, TI " tell him." So he went into a back Par lour, but was quite confounded, when th Doctor instantly came out, and gave hin a severe Reprimand for letting me stand in the Hall; and I am very certain, had thought it worth my While to have ac quainted the Docter with his Infolence, h would have been discharged. A prope Caution to Livery-wearing Fellows to speal with Civility to every Body.

The Doctor shewed meinto a handsom Screet-parlour, adorned with feveral Curic fities, of which here needs no Account He asked me for Sir John Meade, whom because he remembered, he expected should, though he died two Years before was born; when I told him fo, he feeme displeased: And really I remember the good Mr. Cibber, in his pleasant Way scolded me once for not rememberin King Charles II. though my Father wa born in the Reign of King William.

As my Answers to the Doctor, with re lation to the whole Family of the Meade were fufficient to convince him I was not a

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 199

Impostor, he asked me how he could serve ne? I told him I had some Poems to publish, but for Want of a little Money to pay for the Printing of them, I could not proceed: " Poems, returned he; why,. ' did you ever know any Person get Mo-"ney by Poetry?" Yes, Sir, Everal; Mr. Pope in particular:" "Oh Lud, " Lud, (faid he, grinning horribly, and " fquinting hideously) what Vanity thou " hast! can you write like him?" I was quite abashed, and really knew not what to say for some Moments, for my Reader may eafily perceive, I could not but besensible I had made a foolish Speech, unaware to myself; however, upon Recollection, I assured him, I did not presume to put myself in any Degree of Comparison with so justly an admired Writer, but that perhaps, on Account of my Sex, I might find a little Favour,

Well said he, there are a Couple of Guineas for you: This, though far short of my Expectations, was a little present Relief, and as the Gentleman was under no Obligation

K 4

tion to reward or encourage me, I very gratefully accepted of them, and yet

Proud was the Muse I served, unbred to wait

A willing Stranger at a Great Man's Gate!

And here gentle Reader, give me Leave to trespass a Moment on your Patience, to make one Remark, which is, that, amongst all the Persons who are celebrated for being charitable, I never met one really so; and the most humane and beneficent are those whose Characters have been so attacked for their Humanity, that at last they have even been ashamed of well-doing.

I remember Dr. Swift told me, he saw a Beggar attack at Bishop, who charitably from his Abundance, spared him a Halfpenny, and said, God bless you; presently after he attacked Brigadier Groves, who threw Half a Crown to him, and bade G—d d—m him; which, said he, do you think the Beggar prayed for at Night?

But

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 201

But as I have mentioned Dr. Meade, who was so much in Love with Mr. Pope, for saying,

And Books for Meade, and Rarities for Sloane,

I think I must give them also a Sketch of Sir Ha-s, to whom the Doctor advised me to apply, as an Encourager of Arts. I travelled down to Chelsea to wait upon him; it snowed violently, infomuch that I, who had only a Chintz Gown on, was wet to the Skin: The Porter, memorandum, better bred than his Master, to whom I had fent up a Compliment, which, as he did not deserve, I shall not do him the Honour to insert, invited me into his Lodge, where, after about two Hours Attendance, I was at length permitted to enter to his Supreme Majesty; but sure the Pope himfelf, in all his pontifical Robes, never was half so proud. I was conducted by an Escort thro' fix or seven Rooms, one of which was entirely wainscotted, if I may so term it, with China; but like the Idol to whom a stately Temple was consecrated, which a Traveller, attracted by it's outward Mag nificence, thought to find an adorable Deir in, and on Search, found a ridiculou Monkey; fo I faw an old Fellow, whon I am very well convinced never faw me for he did not even vouchsafe to turn hi Eyes off a Paper he was writing, to fe who came in, till at last a Beggar-Woma entered, with a fore eyed Child; the In side of whose Eyelids he very charitably tore out with a Beard of Corn, under which cruel Operation the Girl fainted, but h faid that was good for her. It may be fo for by two-headed Janus, Nature has fra med strange Doctors in her Time.

K 5

Some, who will bid us live on Pulse, and Water;

And others of such Vinegar Aspect,
They would not wag their Jaws in Wa and the least of the real actions and of Smile,

Tho' Nestor swore the Fest were laugh able.

Of this latter Sort was Sir H—ns- Tho? I had sent him up a Letter which lay before him, he asked me what I wanted? if Ihad bad Eyes he faid he would brush themup for Charity; but as they happened to be tolerably good, I excused myself, by telling him I had brought him that Letter 3and indeed I was quick-fighted enough to find out, that his Honour (as the Beggarwoman called him) was a conceited, ridiculous; imperious old Fool.——He then: confidered my Letter over, and finding by the Contents, Dr. Mead had recommended me to him,, faid, " Poor Creature! I sup-" pose you want Charity; there is Half a "Crown for you." I could hardly refift. a strong Inclination I had to quoit it, as Falstaff says, into his Face, like a Threepenny Shovel-groat; and was only constrained by the Consideration, that I had never a Shilling in my Pocket, and that, little as it was, I could eat for it.

I have here done with the Great Sir-H—ns Sl—ne, B—r— of O—k—m, and seturn to Dr. Meade.

204 MEMOIRS of

I had forgot totell my Readers, that rejoicing at my Success, when I returned from his House, I threw the two Guineas up, and had the Misfortune to lose one in a Chink of the Room; the Board my Landlady would never permit me to remove, lest, as she said, I should spoil her Floor. This trivial Accident gave me a great deal of Uneasiness, as it put me out of Power of paying, and quitting her according to my Intention.

However, as I was obliged to live by my Wits, which indeed were almost at an End; I formed a Scheme to write a Panegyric on P - p Lord H - k, then newly created L - d H - k C r of E - d. I did not address him in the Manner I had done a great many of the Nobility, that is with my one Poem, which I sent all round, like the Bishop's Pastoral Letter; it was, as Swift says, Change but the Name, 'twill do again.

I wrote a fire new one for himself, which was really paying him a higher Compliment than

than he deserved, as my Readers may perceive hereaster. I had compleated the Poem, and sent it to him; he desired me to come to him on Sunday, that being his only leisure Time.—

Accordingly, I waited on him at Eight o'Clock on Sunday Morning; the House had rather the Appearance of Defolation and Poverty, than that of the L-d Ch-ll-r of Br-n: He had Complaifance enough to fend his Mace-Bearer to keep me Company, till fuch time as a Pair of Folding-doors flew open, and my Lord appeared in his Robes, ready to go to Church; he bowed down to the Ground to me, and asked me if I would drink a Dish of Chocolate with him? which you may not doubt I accepted of; and was furprized to find myself, though funk in the most abject Poverty, sitting with so great a Man!

So, for my Labour, I got a Dish of * Chocolate, which I now return, with the utmost

^{*} Mem. Chocolate, a Word used by a very emitent Comedian, one Mr. Foote, for Satire.

So, my Lord went to Church, where I also went; I there saw Doctor Meade, who, perceiving his Lordship made me a low Bow, made one four times as low; and I could very hardly refrain laughing at them both, and thinking —— That all this World's a Stage, and All the Men and Women merely Actors;

And that

If every just Man, that now pines with Want,

Had but a moderate, and befeeming Share Of that, which lewdly pamper'd Luxury Now heaps upon some Few, with vost

Excess;
Nature's full Blessings would be well dispensed

In unsuperfluous even Proportion,

And she no Whit encumbered by her Store:

And then the Giver would be better sbank'd,

His

His Praise due paid; for swinish Gluttony

Ne'er looks to Heav'n, amidst his gorgeous Feast;

But, with befotted base Ingratitude, Crams, and blasphemes his Feeder.

Milton's Comus.

Well, I could find no Remedy for the Confumption of my Purse, nor borrow, to linger out the Disease, any where, but from the Pawnbroker; but he was always charitable.

However, I concealed my Distress with the utmost Care from my Landlady; called every Morning for the Teakettle, though I had no Tea; —— then I said I was engaged to dine abroad, and took a solitary Walk to Westminster-Abby, —and ranged the solemn Isles alone, envying those who rested in Peace from their Labours; till, at last, having been three Days and three Nights without Food of any kind, Heaven pardon me! a melancholy Thought came into my Head, that it was better to die at once, than die daily; and that, as I could own Quietus, and no longer strive to keep up a frail and feverish Being: And here, indeed, I own, I had been unmindful of the Crown which Virtue gives,

After this mortal Coil, to her true Ser-

Despair vanquished me quite; nay, so articular was the Enemy, as even to persuade me, I had a Right to dispose of my own Life, especially when there did not seem, even a Possibility of preserving it. Filled with gloomy Ideas, I took my usual Walk, and took notice of the Corner, between the Monuments of Shakespear and Rowe, where I wished to be interred, and that Mr. Pope's Lines,

How lov'd, bow honour'd, once avails me not,

To whom related, or by whom begot; An Heap of Dust alone remains of me, 'Tis all I am, 'tis all the Proud shall be.

night be my Epitaph. I really found room or Meditation, even to Madness.

In this Temper I went into St. James's ark, and feated myself by Rosamond's 'ond; the Moon, apparent Queen, uneiled her peerless Light, and I waited in ne filent Shade, refolved to execute my readful Purpose, as soon as I could do it ithout Observation, when a young Lady, nd an old one, both very well dreffed, ated themselves by me; they, in an eleant Stile began to praise the sweet and olemn Beauties of the Moon-light Scene, he Winds gently whispered through the agrant Lime-trees, just then in full lower; and, indeed, though they were not ernal Airs, they might have dissipated all Inguish, but Despair: Finding, that notrithstanding my Taciturnity, the Ladies vould enter into Conversation with me, I ould not, in Point of good Breeding, reuse to return them Answers, with as much Politeness, as I was Mistress of, till at ength, we were so pleased with each other, hat Time infensibly slying, we found we vere locked into the Park; but the Ladies, whose Garden opened into it, insisted on my accompanying them to Supper.

We were let in at a Back-door, by Servant in Livery, to a very gentee House, where, on a Sopha, sat a very handsome Man in a Gold Brocade Night Gown, to whom the young Lady presented me, and faid, he was her Spouse; the Cloth was ready laid, and a cold Supper on the Table: I would very fain have prevailed on the Lady to permit me to go through her House home, for I could ea fily perceive the Gentleman's Civility wa quite forced, and, that he was impatient to revenge on his Wife the Liberty she had taken of inviting a Stranger in; which in deed, I believe, she did on no other Ac count, but, that she thought Decency would prevent him from giving her a Beating, o which, it feems, he was very liberal, though he was but a Footman when the Lad married him, and threw herfelf, and twent' thousand Pounds away upon him, as afterwards learned.

But, as the late Earl of Pembroke ob feryed, when he was told a Maid of Ho

Love with him, notwithstanding he was n old Hump-back'd Man, but one of inite Wit, said, "Faith, it may be so," Women have strange Fancies!"

I, though Goodless, never spent three Hours more disagreeably, especially, as this House brought back to my Mind, the Fear and Terror I always selt in Mr. P——n's, o which, if my Father, Mother, or any Friend came, it threw me into Agonies, peing well assured, they would never depart without receiving some gross Affront, uch as the two sollowing Stories, trivial is they are, may serve to illustrate.

One Alhallow's Eve, a Night of Pleafure and Difport in Ireland, among the young Maidens and Batchelors, my Brother and Sifter, who had invited some Persons, agreeable to their own Age, to celebrate it with them, very fairly begged of us, old Folks, to go abroad; to oblige them, and myself also, I begged of Doctor Delany, who dined with us, and my Father and Mother, to come home with me, and try if we could not be as chearful as they:
no sooner proposed the Scheme than the all agreed to it. As my Father was n Supper-Man, I had ordered a Custard t be made for him, and having a barnstabl
Oven, it was put into it to bake.

While we were amusing ourselves in a greeable Chat, entered Mr. P—n, like the Description of Winter, Striding the gloomy Blast!

and observing a Smoak, occasioned by the lighting of the Oven, he descended to examine the Contents thereof, sound the Custard, eat most part of it, and sent the Remainder out of Doors, telling us to our Faces, we should not liquor our Chops at his Expence; though, memorandum, my dear Father always sent his Supper and Wine before him, whenever he vouchsafed us the Honour of a Visit.

The fecond Instance of my Spouse's Good-nature, was, that though he had no less than thirteen Hens, he, knowing I liked a new-laid Egg for my Supper, watched he Hen-rooft close, and every Egg was in Basket sent to the Widow W-rr-n. overed with a Damask Napkin, of which he got no less than eighteen given to me y Brigadier Meade: At length, one Evenng, when my Husband was abroad, my Brother and Sister came to visit me; when he Clock struck Ten, I concluded Mr. P——n would not come home to Supper. and I had the Impudence to eat two Eggs; they were scarce down when he came in, my Brother had fent for a Bottle of Wine, and invited his Reverence to drink a Glass. but *he scorned us and our vile Infinuations: and as he always kept an exact Reckoning for his Poultry, he very magisterially ordered his Eggs to be got ready; this was a Thunder-clap to me; however, as it was n vain to attempt to hide my Guilt, I was forced to confess the horrid Fact; upon which he stood aghast, as though he had seen Church-yards yawn, and Hell itself oreathe forth Contagion to the World.

What,

^{*} Mem. He says, in one of his Letters, that the Nobility scorned me, and my vile Infinuations and Impudence.

What, said he, did you eat my blace Hen's Egg? Could not any other satisfayour dirty Guts? I wish the Devil was it the Egg, and that it had choaked you.

table Wish too late; and, lest it shoul take any Effect, I drank a Glass of my Brother's Wine, that I might digest all together.

Oh, let the World judge how happy was! But to return.

Though my Park Adventure had diverted the Execution of my fad Schem for one Evening, yet, as it had brough me no Relief, I still kept my Purpose, and resolved to sulfil it the next: To this End I came and fat in the same Place; I mad several Attempts to throw myself in, and still, when I came near the Water, the Fear of something after Death puzzled the Will I examined my Heart strictly, to know what gross Offence I had ever committed that it should

Please Heav'n to try me with Afflictions,
To steep me in Poverty up to the very Lips; Give

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 215 Give to Captivity me and my utmost Hopes.

For, had I ever refused my Morsel to he Hungry, or ever filled the Widow's Eyes with Tears, I should not wonder at t. Quite lost in these melancholy Reslecions, I was waked as from a Dream, by a ery well dreffed Gentleman, who tapped ne on the Shoulder, and faid, Lord, can his be Mrs. Pilkington? I looked at him arneftly, and recollecting I had feen his face before, answered, it was all the Renains of her that was Mrs. Pilkington. May I presume, Madam, to ask, on what ntention you are fitting her? I fancy he erceived by my Looks the Disorder of ny Soul, which, I believe, was strongly lictured there. I begged he would leave ne to myself-But he insisted on my going long with him to the Royal Vineyard, thich was not far off-it vas in vain to efuse him, he would take no Denial. When ve were got about half way, I very feloufly demanded of him, who he was? He nswered, he was Capt. Hamilton, who had once the Honour of seeing me at my Unce Van Lewen's in Cork, and who should thin himself very happy, if it was any way his power to serve me. We got a confound and some Ham, of which I eat little, and took a Glass or two of Chan paigne, and I found it revive me ver much. We then fell into Discourse, and very sincerely related to him my unhapp Situation, and the Peril his Appearant had delivered me from. My Story affects him so much, that it drew Tears from him

After we had regaled ourselves, it growing late, we left the Park, and he was kind to see me to my Lodging; where putting a conple of Guineas into my Hand we parted, and he promised to see me new Morning; but I saw him no more.

I am sure, when Mr. P——n come to this part of my Story, he will wish the Gentleman had been buried, sooner than he should do him so ill an Office, as that confaving my Life; but I, among othe things, was born to let the World see what the Inside of a Priest is made of;

Prompt, or to stab, or saint, to save, or damn;

Heav'n's Swiss, who fight for any God, or Man!

Pope.

Take notice, I always except the good and valuable part of the Clergy, whom nobody more highly respects and honours than I incerely do; for when they possess, like Berkley, every Virtue under Heaven, who an refuse it?

I once more began to believe myself uner the Favour and Protection of the Alnighty; as his Hand, though to me inisible, visibly led me through various sazes, perplexed with Error; and deterined, whatever Sufferings he was pleased inslict, to bear them with Resignation, ad never permit them to triumph over a thristian Faith.

And a fevere and cruel Trial of my onstancy I quickly experienced; there was young Woman, who lodged in the Gart, whom I not only to the utmost of my liwer supported, as she was my Country-Vol. II. L. woman, warmly on the Subject to my Lord, and without allowing myself time for Thought dispatched it off.

218 MEMOIRS of

For I bear Anger as the Flint bears Fire,

Which much enforced, shews a hasty Spark,

And strait is cool again. SHAKESPEAR.

The fatal Epistle had scarce left my Hands'e'er my Heart was agitated with the most sensible Remorse. I in vain dispatched a Messenger after the first,

'Twas past, 'twas gone, 'twas irreconverable;

It reach'd his Hands, and he only sent for Answer, "'Tis very well:"

I believe the judicious Part of my Readers, must have apprehended that the Sin of Ingratitude is not amongst the Number of mine, since I have endeavoured through my Work, if possible, to make the contrary conspicuous, by rendering dering due Praise to all my Benefactors. Yet what could my beloved Lord imagine, but that he had bestow'd all his Favours on an unworthy Person?

I did not believe that after all the Anguish of Mind I had sustained through my Life, any thing could move my Philosophy, (which had made me determine never to be overjoyed or surprized, at any Advancement in Life, nor dejected or cast down at any Adversity on this Side Futurity) so much as this.

Downy Repose was a Stranger to my Pillow, and I fell a Prey to the greatest Languor and Heaviness of Soul. However as I knew his Lordship was filled with the Milk of human Pity, I imagined, by apologizing for the rash Act, I should be blest with his forgiveness, and a Renewal of his Friendship to me, to which End I wrote the following Lines:

To the Right Hon, the Lord Kingf-borough.

No more my Lord with Pleasure I expect, Your friendly Aid my Weakness to protect.

L 2

Loft

old Woman, being very much depressed in Spirit, I went to Bed.

Early next Morning, to my no small Surprize, entered a Couple of ill-favoured Fellows, the Sight of whom struck Terro to my Soul. I demanded their Business one of them answered, "Get up, you Iril " Papist Bitch, and come along with us." The other, who had employed himself it looking over my Papers, cried, "Ay " the Irish Whore, here is something a " bout some Roman Father, that's th " Pope, and be damn'd to you, is it?" I was for some time quite speechless, but when I recovered Strength enough to speak I begged of them to leave the Room, tillput on my Clothes; but my Landlady coming in at that instant, cried, "You'r " damn'd modest; -don't quit the Place: The Fellows, who had more Decency that she, looked out at the Window, while. dreffed myfelf, in which Time my Agon was inconceivable; they called a Coach and thrusting me into it, conveyed me to the House of an Officer of Mace at Charing-cross; as I happened to have a Gui lea in my. Pocket, I called for a Room nd a Pint of Wine, and then confidered, FI had one Friend I could apply to: My lear Mr. Cibber was out of Town, as were ikewise most of the Nobility; however, I aw young Mr. Cibber go by the Window, nd fent to him, but like all the World, then he heard my Condition, he would ot come near me. My whole Debt was Porty Shillings; O, what could I do but ive my Tears Vent! which was my only telief; and next Day, after paying twenty hillings, I was conveyed to the Marshalsea 'rison. I sat withinside of the Lodge for me Minutes quite stupissed; till at length Man came, and asked me, if I was a 'risoner, which, it seems, he did not bebre know; I told him I was, upon which e brought me into a Room, where a Parel of Wretches seized me, and sung a long ong about Garnish, and were going to pull ly Clothes off, till a Servant, who had feen ne before, said, "For God's sake don't use Dr. Meade's Wife ill:" Upon this most ugly Woman came up, and said, G-d d-n you, you B-h, do you " pretend " pretend to be Dr. Meade's Wife?-" am his Wife." I begged to be heard which was granted; I told her my Nami was Meade, and my Husband a Clergy man in Ireland. "Oh, that's a differen " Case, said she, going off." They wer kind enough to take my Word for fom Drink; and a good decent Woman faid she would accept of me for a Chum, a they call it. She brought me into a little dirty Apartment, where, without examin ing any thing, I in Despair threw mysel down on a Bed I saw there, and resolve never to rife again. Three Days an Nights past, during which Time I neve tasted Food of any fort. At length th Companion of my Misery pressed me ! take a little Refreshment, which I was per fuaded do; and feeing fo many People i my own Condition, at length reconcile me to think of making myself as easy: possible; and leave myself to the Dispol tion of Divine Providence. One Mornin a Friend came to visit me, by whom fent a Letter to Dr. M-de, telling his my Distress, and, among other Thing CA] these Lines:

AN, alas! the plaintive Pray'r,
Dictated by Grief fincere,
Hope to reach a friendly Ear:
Will thy kind and bounteous Heart
Sympathize while I impart
Such Affliction, as before Never hapless Woman bore.

I made no doubt but I should be relieved, and waited impatiently for the Answer, which was as follows:

To Mrs. MEADE in the Marshalsea.

Ormond-street, October 16, 1742.

MADAM,

Have so many Applications for Charity, that it is impossible for me to relieve all; those from your Country alone are very numerous: The Family of the Meades there are very rich, and should take care of their needy Branches; I have, for the last Time, sent you a Guinea.

I am,

Your humble Servant,

R. M.

224 MEMOIRS of

I kept the Original of this by me, with a Resolution, when I should these unluck Deeds relate, not to omit it. This was soon gone, I had many to satisfy: I the wrote to Henry Furnese, Esq; who in polite manner sent me a Guinea, which doubled the Obligation;

For, oh! believe me, 'tis a dreadful Task To generous Minds, to be compell'd to ask More dreadful still to have a Suit deny'd Or take a niggard Alms, giv'n with Contempt and Pride.

I was by this supported till my dear Mr Cibber came to Town, who was no sooner acquainted with my Missortune, than he sent me a Guinea all changed into Six-pences, lest it should tempt some one to pick my Pocket; this was an Instance of singular Humanity; but he has often said, when he did good to People in Distress, it was only to ease his own Mind, which would otherwise have been on the Rack: Oh, Heavens! what innate Goodness must dwell in that Breast?

Seeing the Woman, that accused me for being the Doctor's Wise, lying dead drunk in the Puddle, I asked my Companion, who she was? Madam, I'll tell you, said she: She was a Servant to Dr. M—de, who had a Child by her, and supported her in his House for some time; at length they parted, and he was to allow her sive Guineas a Week: But the Doctor marrying his present Lady, began to be remiss in his Payments, which enraged Madam to such a Degree, that, forgetting Decency, she went to his House, and, in Presence of all his Servants, abused and exposed him to the utmost of her power.

Upon this the Doctor stepped into his Chariot, and ordered it to drive to her Lodging, where finding she was indebted o her Landlord, one Mr. Bradst——t, amous for being a Spy for the D—— of C——, he desired him to arrest, and out her in Jail. This artful Fellow alredged, it would be very expensive; but he Doctor having Charity-money enough o supply such Exigencies, said, he valued tot the Expence, so she was secured. Upon this this the poor Wretch was arrested, and thrown into-Jail; and from time to tim Bradst——t got three hundred Pounds of the Doctor for keeping her there; till a length the Doctor growing weary of the Expence, consented to her Releasement but she had so entirely devoted herself to drinking, that she died a few Days after she obtained her Liberty.

226 MEMOIRS of

And so let this be booked among other of his good Works, such as combing the Ladies Heads, &c. &c.

I think it is a great Pity that every charitably disposed Person is not his own Almoner, since it is a thousand to one, whether that which was intended to help the Distrest and Innocent, is not applied to the Service of Luxury and Vice! I amfure, to my own Knowledge, in several Instances it has been so by the D-st-r, who has many Assairs of the same Nature on his Hands; and, to quote his favourite Mr. Pope,

Now, in such Exigencies, not to need, Upon my Word, you must be rich indeed,

A

Not for yourself, but for your Whores and Knaves!

I remember, twenty Years ago, to have heard Dr. Delany say from the Pulpit, it was a glorious thing for a Man to be his own Executor: I dare fay, he never preached but what he practifed; and, except that eternal Treasure, which he has wisely laid up in store, where neither Moth nor Rust can corrupt, nor Thieves break thro' and steal: Whenever he comes to pay his Mortal Debt-which Hour be far away!---all he will have left on this fide of a bleffed and glorious Immortality, will be a Shower of Orphans and of Widows Tears, to bedew the confecrated Earth, where his honoured Remains shall' rest in Peace, till summoned to partake of that Bliss, prepared by the Almighty before all Worlds, for Souls like his.

As I have frequently observed to my Readers, that I was glad to run away from such a disagreeable Theme as my Missortunes, I hope for their Pardon, though I am obliged to return to them again, and give them an Account even of fo difmal a Place as a Jail.

Our Head-Turnkey happened to have been a Servant to Alderman Barber; and, like Joseph, I found Favour in the Sight of my Keeper, as he had seen me in better Days.

For, Certes, I had look'd on better Days, And had with holy Bell been knoll'd to Church,

And fat at good Men's Feasts, and wip'd the Eye

Of Drops, which sacred Pity had engender'd.

This Man took great Compassion on me, and as on every Friday, which is Court-day, the Prisoners are all locked up in their respective Apartments, lest, when the Gates are thrown open for the Admission of the Judge and Lawyers, any of them should make their Escape: I was always indulged in the Liberty of hearing the Trials, which, as a Court of Judicature was a Scene I had never before beheld, greatly imused me.

And, indeed, I quickly perceived Sir Richard Steele was not mistaken. when he aid the first, second, and third Excellence of a Lawyer was Tautology.

Yet this was but a transitory Relaxation, once in a Week; the Horror of my Conlition returned with double Violence the Moment I heard the Key turn for my Confinement.

If Mr. P—n should alledge, that I have been severe on him in my Writings; let him but consider, the Extremity that he drove a worthy Gentleman's Daughter to, nurtured in Ease and Plenty: and if he does not acquit me, I am sure the rest of the World will.

We had a fort of a Chappel belonging to the Jail, where Dr. Friend, a Clergyman, Brother to Dr. Friend the Physician, obliged us with Divine Service every Sunday: This Gentleman was himself a Prifoner in the King's-Bench, and, after all the Grandeur he had once lived in, was now so low reduced, as even to be beholden to such an unfortunate Creature as I so Sixpence; which, unfortunate as I was, could not refuse to so fine an Orator, Gentleman! and, by all Accounts, only undone by boundless Generosity and Hos pitality.

The first Day I heard him preach I was charmed with his Elocution, but the rest of the Congregation, mad and drunk, bade him hold his Tongue;—he indeed, like Orpheus, played to Wolves and Bears; nor were they half so obliging to him; as the Storms were to Arion; neither could he, though uttering dulcet and harmonious Sounds, make the rude Crowd grow civil with his Song.

This fine Gentleman I often invited to my lonely Mansion—he was not a little surprised to hear my mournful Story;—and indeed it somewhat alleviated my Sorrow to find such a Companion:—Poor Gentleman! Death has released him; I am sure I should have done it, had the Almighty given me a Power equal to my Inclination to serve him.

However I may praise God that I was, under him, the happy Instrument of Good to Numbers of my wretched Fellow-creatures, since by one pathetic Memorial I wrote for them, the sorrowful Sighing of the Prisoners reached the Hearts of the Legislative Powers, and obtained an Act of Grace for them.

But as it was now near Christmas, and the Act was not to take Place till the June following, I used my utmost Endeavours to procure my own Liberty; for, oh! what anxious Moments must have passed between that dreadful Interval of Time? On a second Application to Mr. Cibber, he used all his Power with the Great for me, and, as he had been used to move their Passions, did it effectually on my Behalf, insomuch than no less than sixteen Dukes contributed a Guinea a-piece towards my Enlargement.

When I read over these Words, Discharge from your Custody the Body of, &c. as I was by nine Weeks Confinement, Sickness, and Fasting, rendered quie weak, the joyful Surprise made me faint away several Times, and indeed, my kind Benefactor had like to have frustrated his own generous Design of preserving me.

However, after all Debts, Extortions and Dues were paid, I had just thirtee Shillings left, with which Sum I was one more permitted to breathe the open Airand go where I pleased.

As foon as I got as far as London-Bridge I found my Head turn quite giddy, and my Legs fail me, infomuch that I wen into a Jeweller's Shop, who perceiving my weak Condition, permitted me to fil down in it; I begged of him to le fome of his Servants call a Coach for me. which he civilly complied with; when I was got into it, I was at a Loss where to bid the Coachman drive me; till at last recollecting, that all my Writings, All, the little all! which might make my future Fortune, were in the Possession of Mrs. Trifoli, the Woman who had cast me into Misery unspeakable, which, not to teize my Readers, I have flightly passed over: for what Entertainment can it possibly give to the curious, learned, or polite Reader to hear from me what every Person,

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 233 erson, who has ever been in a Jail, can late as well as I.

Well, I was carried to her House, where, I told her, I did not know where to dge that Night; she kindly accepted of the for a Bedsellow, but a very bad one found, for she, as my Spirits were quite tigued, no sooner found I was fast asleep, at she picked my Pocket.

When I awoke in the Morning, she sked me to give her some Tea, on which king up my Pocket to give her Money go for it, I sound I had none; when complained of this Usage, she told me was too charitable to permit me to sleep ith her, and now this was her Reward; she insisted on my turning out of her loors, and truly I knew not where to

Thro' the blind Mazes of a tangled World; o I went dirty, as I came out of Jail, to Ir. Cibber; for I ought before to have befored, that this Wretch not only fecured ny Person, but my Clothes also, insomuch nat I had not a Shift to change me, till, out of what Charity was fent me, I boug a fecond one in the Jail.

However, he received me with as muc Regard and Kindness, as though I habeen ever so well drest; but he charge me not to give him Thanks for any Thin he had done to serve me, but to prai God, who, as he said, had given me Mirit; "For, Child, said he, were yo "stupid, insensible, or wicked, I shoul "never have had the smallest Compassio" for you."

He asked me what I now intended t do? I affured him I did not know; fo that I neither had a Lodging, nor, what was yet worfe, a Shilling to get one "Well, faid he, I have a little Money in "Store for you; I told your melanchol" Story to the Duke of Richmond, and "he gave me Five Guineas for you; there "they are."

This was a Lottery Prize to one in my unhappy Situation; I could not, though prohibited, forbear the warmest Expressions of Gratitude, both to his Grace and Mr. Cibber; to the Duke I wrote a Letter

f Acknowledgment, and provided myself with a Lodging in Westminster, and, as it was on Christmas Eve I obtained my Lierty, on New-Year's Day I published in the Gazette the following Lines:

To COLLEY CIBBER, E/q;

OST in a Prison's joyless Gloom, _ Chearless and dreary as the Tomb, Where on the Bed of Care I lay, And wept the lonely Hours away: When ev'ry Hope and Wish was fled, But to be number'd with the Dead, You, like a Messenger of Grace, Spoke my despairing Soul to Peace; Wip'd off the Tear from Sorrow's Eye, Bid Bars, and Bolts, strong warded, fly; Bounty, the Angel-Men revere Wrought Miracles of Mercy there. Say, shall those Deeds forgotten die, Or, lost in cold Oblivion lie? May Heav'n no longer guard that Breath You rescu'd from untimely Death, Than Gratitude attunes my Lays In sweetest Notes to hymn your Praise;

Nor can the Song offend the Ear, Thus offer'd from a Soul fincere.

Enlarg'd, once more, with Joy I view The circling Sun his Course renew. May He, whose Wisdom guides the Sphere Proportion Blessings to thy Years; To Thee, may rosy-bosom'd Spring, Pleasure, and Health, and Plenty bring, Till Time, with gentle Steps, convey Thy Soul to Realms of endless Day, Where Cherubims for Thee, with Care, Unenvy'd deathless Wreaths prepare. Those modest Virtues You conceal, Shall Heav'n-born Charity reveal; And mortal Goodness, to improve, Unite You can immortal Love.

Oh, let your Gaiety excuse,
My serious melancholy Muse!
This World appears a Dream to me,
Afflictions teach Philosophy;
And thus, alone, a Christian Heart,
It's grateful Raptures can impart.

My dear old Friend was pleased with my Sense of his Goodness to me; only he told re, my Lines were more proper to be adcessed to an Archbishop than to him, who ld nothing to boast of more than a little common Humanity.

Well, being now free,—and with five trineas in my Pocket, in flowing Circum-Inces, I began to consider, in what Man-Ir I should improve them; so I wrote to a Grace of M——b, who, like Lord Ingsborough, knows not how to give one trinea by way of Relief, he immediately fit me Ten, sealed up in a very genteel letter, with his best Wishes and Complicents to me: who was now so rich as I?

But, as Shakespear observes,

There is a Tide in the Affairs of Men, Which taken at the Height, is prosperous;

But, slighted, the Residue of their Lives Is bound in Shallows and in Miscry.

I just then heard a Clergyman was in ingland, who was a near and intimate liend of my Father's; him I addressed, ad was ordered to go to Mr. Richardson, a Printer, in Salisbury-court, for an Alfwer to my Letter.

As I had never formed any great Idea a * Printer, by those I had seen in Irelan I was very negligent of my Dress, at more than making myself clean; but wextremely surprised, when I was direct to a House of a very grand outward Appearance, and had it been a Palace, the beneficent Master deserved it.

I met a very civil Reception fro him; and he not only made me breal fast, but also dine with him, and his agre able Wife and Children. After Dinn he called me into his Study, and shewe me an Order he had received to pay n twelve Guineas, which he immediate took out of his Escrutore, and put it in my Hand; but when I went to tell the over, I found I had sourteen, and supposing the Gentleman had made a Mistak I was for returning two of them; but he with vith a Sweetness and Modesty almost peuliar to himself, said, he hoped I would of take it ill, that he had presumed to dd a Trisle to the Bounty of my Friend.

^{*} Mem. Not our present Set of Printers, who a many of them Gentlemen, and Persons in good Ci cumstances, preticularly my own.

I really was confounded, till, recollecting nat I had read Pamela, and been told it as written by one Mr. Richardson, I ked him, whether he was not the Autor of it? He said, he was the Editor: I hld him, my Surprize was now over, as I and he had only given to the incompatible Pamela the Virtues of his own worthy leart.

When he reads these Lines, as read them am certain he will, even for the Writer's ke, let him reslect, that, at least, his read was not scattered on the Water; at that though I have no other Way of lewing my Gratitude for his boundless and peated Acts of Humanity to me, and my hildren, but Words, mere Words; yet, every Word of mine could charm down lessings on him,

Then never shou'd Missortune cross his Foot;

But Peace shou'd be within his Wall, and Plenty,

Health, and Happiness his constant At tendants.

And now, that I might, if possible avoid the Misery of extreme Want, I re folved to turn my Stock into Trade; and after long Confideration, thought nothin would fuit my Inclination fo well as Pamphlet-Shop, nor no Place was fo pro per for my Purpose as St. James's-Stree where I should be in the Center of m noble Benefactors; to this end, I walke through it, and finding one to be le which answered my Purpose, I directly agreed to give the Landlord twenty-or Pounds a Year, for a Shop, Parlour, an Kitchen; bút the Landlord insisted upc my paying a Quarter's Rent before-hand which, though a little hard upon me, as not only had the Shop to stock, but Fu niture of all Kinds to buy, I complie with.

So, Reader, here was a new Scene, and for the first of my Family, took my Place behind a Counter.

Having met with a very great Bargain of Prints, which were fold under Diftress, and having some Knowledge in that Way, resolved also to deal in them; so, having ecorated out my Windows with them to be best Advantage, early on Monday Morning I entered on my new Employ.

The first Person who entered was Lord — st.—n, dress'd à la mode de Paris, with ing sloped double Russles, such as the Laies wear; he took down the Print of bakespear's Monument, and, though it was arked Price Eighteen-pence, he bade me Groat for it, which, as it had cost me Shilling, I could by no means take; so It went away very much displeased, and taly, I began to be out of Conceit with my Occupation.

As my dear Mr. Cibber had made me a pelent of fifty of his last Answer to Mr. Inpe, I sat down to read it, and found it still of Spirit and Humour, that just as it had thrown me into a hearty Fit of Vol. II. M Laugh-

Laughter, a Clergyman entered, who asked me, what I had got new? I told him my present Situation: He looked earnestly or me, and said, he was very sure of that "But, Madam, said he, all are not born to be happy in this World, however they may merit it, which plainly demon frates a suture State, where Reward

" strates a future State, where Reward and Punishments will be impartially dif

" tributed; but why should I tell this to "Mrs. Pilkington, who may better in

" struct her Teacher?"

I begged of the Gentleman to inform me, where I had had the Honour of feeing him? He told me, he was Son to Colone Stuart, who lived next Door to my Father before I was married, and when he himsel was in the College: I then recollected, the he used every Day to send me some poetical Praise, and as I never before had an Orportunity of thanking him for his elegan Compliments, I took it now.

As he was desirous of giving me Hanse as they call it, I recommended Mr. Cibber Letter to him, as a Cure for the Spleen, Distemper most studious and learned Personal Personal ons are apt to fall into; he took the shoft's Word for the Excellence of the 'erformance, and gave me a Guinea; I as going to give him Change, but he ould not accept of it; fo, promifing to a constant Customer for whatever I old, and wishing me all Success, he dearted. Mem. The Clergyman infinitely fore generous than the Peer.

As my Obligations to Mr. Cibber were rer present to my Mind, I wrote to him e following kind of Paraphrase on an de of Horace:

To Mr. CIBBER.

Donarem pateras. Hor.

ID Fortune wait upon my Hand, Cou'd I her various Gifts command, ler noblest Offering wou'd I give o Him, whose Bounty bade me live, golden Goblet, richly chas'd, lose by a mantling Vine embrac'd, Those Fruitage round the Brim should fhine, nd feem to yield the sparkling Wine,

244 MEMOIRS of

Or radiant Gems, of Value rare, Shou'd speak my Gratitude sincere, For thy far nobler Gift to me, Inestimable LIBERTY!

They feldom deal in Gems, or Plate; For yet in all Parnassus Mold, There ne'er appear'd one Vein of Gold. We toil, and labour all our Days For a few Sprigs of barren Bays; They, Thunder-proof, its Rage defy, Yet, touch'd by Envy, blasted die.

Yet Verse can consecrate a Name,
And worthy Deeds consign to Fame;
Oh! cou'd I raise a Song sublime,
Triumphant over Fate and Time,
Thy Virtue in the Lays divine
Should with immortal Lustre shine:
Let others place phantastic Joys
In orient Trinkets, splendid Toys!
While your exalted Soul refin'd,
Like Heav'n, accepts the GRATEF MIND.

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 245

I sent these Lines to my dear Gentleman, who presently came to me, as I was once more in his Neighbourhood,——and in his chearful way, said, "Faith, Child, you have praised me so, that, I think, it is the least I can do to make you eat for a Fortnight;"——so he gave me three Guineas.

As my Mind was now a little at Peace, I began to think of my dear Children, whom nothing but my Incapacity of doing them Service, and a Supposition that their Father took proper Care of them, could ever divert my Thoughts from, even a Moment; so strong is maternal Love, at least, if every Mother loves like me: For, really, and I hope it is a pardonable Frailty, my very Life is treasured in him, whom I may properly stile my only Child, and were he to die I should not long survive him.

I know not of what impenetrable Stuff his Father's Heart was made of, that could let fuch a Son, not only want the Advantages of Education, which had it not been in his Power to pay for it, it was in his own Power to bestow on him, so far as instructing him in the Knowledge of Latin and Greek, which Cato would not permishis Son to be indebted to a Slave for;—and yet Cato was, at least, as good, and a much greater Man than the Parson; surely this he might have done:——No; on the contrary, he chose to expose him, at Nine Years of Age, to every Calamity in Life; and that he did not turn Thief of Pickpocket, was due to God's restraining Grace, and providential Care of him.

 M_{*} 3 in

And here, I must, in Vindication of my Child, declare, he never was undutiful or disrespectful to me, as his Father has falsly and cruelly reported; he is, like all Persons of his Age, so full of Mirth and overflowing Spirits, that, I am certain, the Dulness his Father brings, as an Excuse for taking him from School, never was his Fault;

For he is

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 247

All my Mirth, my Exercise, my Matter, He makes my July's Days short as December,

And, with his varying Playfulness, kills in me

Thoughts which would thick my Blood.

Though, I am fure, only that he has too nuch Respect for his Father, to throw any Restection on him; yet he might properly ay,

He let me feed with his Hinds, debar'd ne of a Place in his Love, and, as much is was in him, mined my Gentility by base Education.

And I may fay, with Truth, the Boy is sentle, though

Never school'd, learn'd; full of noble Device,

And of all Sorts enchantingly belov'd.

Shakespear, As you like it.

M 4

But

But to return. I wrote to Ireland to my. eldest Son, who, either through Fear of his Father's Anger, or an ill-natur'd Spirit derived from him, did not think me worth an Answer; however, he shewed the Letter to his Sister, who, in her low Stile, sent me an affectionate Letter. Before in reached me, I heard Mr. Ar-e was come to London, and having been told my Child was bound Apprentice to him, I did not doubt but I should find him with him, so I went to wait on him; he received me very politely, and told me, my Son had left him, and was gone to Scotland: Wher I demanded, how they came to part? He faid, he had pawned fome of his Music Books, and that he had complained to his Father of him, who asked what they might be worth? It is to be prefumed that they were valued to the utmost they cost; upor which Mr. P—n, ever tender, faic he was glad to hear that the Theft, as he termed it, amounted to Death, intreating Mr. Ar—e to profecute the Child, for fuch he then was, and declaring that nothing in the World would give him greater action than to hear that the Dog waslang'd.

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 249

Mr. Ar—e said, Mr. P——n's Inumanity quite shocked him, —— so he orrected the Boy very severely, upon which he ran away from him; that he had nce received a Letter from him, which he shewed to me, and from thence I got a Direction where to write to him. I was, hay be supposed, infinitely disturbed at his Account of my Son; I wrote to him hat very Night, and informed him of hat Mr. A—e had said; I begged of him ho come to me, and that as his Master had highly commended his musical Talents, I head, by Mr. Cibber's Interest, to get him higaged at one of the Theatres.

About ten Days after, having, just paiding Rent, and bought some Shop-Goods, which I had laid out every Penny I was orth; —— as I had stuck up on my nop Window, Letters written here on my Subject, except the Law, Price Twelvence; Petitions also drawn at the same ate. Mem. Ready Money, no Trust.

A Man came in, very badly dreft, wit a greafy Leather Apron before him; looked over fome Prints, when the Pol man brought me a large Pacquet, marke Edinburgh; as I had no Money, I was i terrible Confusion, especially as the Fello cried, "Come, Mistress, don't keep m " waiting;" I faid, I must send out fe Change: Oh, faid he, I never go without it; where's your Piece? Upon this, th Leather-apron'd Gentleman, for fuch l was, drew out a Handful of Gold, an throwing down a Guinea, faid, "Ther take your Money;" and what was y more furprizing, he infifted on my takin the Change, for he determined, he faid, 1 have me his Debtor.

Upon this I began to have a very different Opinion of my new Customer than wh his first Appearance gave me, and therefor civilly entreated his Permission to peru my Letter, to which he agreeing, I ha not read above ten Lines when I burst int Tears, so the Gentleman infisted on m laying it aside while he stayed, telling me

I must so far oblige him as to write a Love-Letter for him.

Upon this I invited him into the Parlour, and told him, he must make me his Consident: He said, he had never mentioned Love to the Lady; that, as to her Person, she was very agreeable, but that her Mind sar surpassed it: So, having my Instructions, I quickly sinished my Task greatly to his Satisfaction, insomuch that he professed I must give him Leave to send for a Flask of Champaigne to raise my Spirits, which, indeed, were greatly oppressed.

By the time he had drank a Glass or two, te began to talk of Homer, Horace, Milton, and all the Poets; sung an Italian long; and soon convinced me, that Dress was put on merely to disguise a sine Genteman, which it was no way in his Power of do; I told him so, and asked him, why e wasked in Masquerade?

He finited at my Question, but affored ae, he was neither better or worse than House-Painter, and that his Name was tom Brush.

M 6

This

This put me in Mind of an Adventure I once had in Ireland, when one of the finest Gentlemen in it came to visit me in a Grazier's Coat, and told me his Name was Tom Long, the Carrier, though he happened to be an English Baronet, with a large Estate, and a great Employment.

But I have been a Lady of Adventure; and almost every Day of my Life produces some new one: I am sure, I ought to thank my loving Husbard for the Opportunity he has afforded me of seeing the Work from the Palace to the Prison; for had he but permitted me to be what Nature certainly intended me for, a harmless hous hold Dove, in all human Probability should have rested contented with my humble Situation, and, instead of using a Pen, been employed with a Needle, to work for the little ones we might, by this time, have had.

Now, after all my strange Vicissitude of good and evil Fortune, I sincerely de clare, that were I to have my Wish, the I should not now in the Decline of Life b able to struggle through Missortunes, as it

it

Bounty, Compassion, and Kindness of all my noble, and honoured Benefactors, I have the unspeakable Happiness of being set above the low Distresses of Life.

Now pleas'd Remembrance builds Delight on Woe.

Pope's Homer.

I think I am glad that there has been such strong Proof made of my Constancy, without which I had scarce known how duly to praise that eternal Goodness, who evermore gave me Strength adequate to the severe Afflictions he was pleased to try me with. Be then all Praise to him, who

From seeming Evil, still educes good,
And better still from thence, and better still
To infinite Perfection.

Well, when Mr. Brush departed, I read my dear Child's Letter, which was as follows:

Edinburgh, Sept. 16, 1744.

My dear, dear Mother,

the Receipt of your kind Letter infpired me with, to find a long lost Treafure! for I was so positively assured you were dead, that I can hardly believe my Eyes, when I see your dear and well-known Hand, and read your beloved Name, which I have kissed a thousand Times: If it be Delusion, may I never be undeceived!

You desire me to give you a particular Account of whatever has befallen me since I had the Missortune of loosing you, my dearest and only Friend; for I, with all Duty and Gratitude, remember your fond Affection to me: It is to you I am indebted that I can either read or write, or know any part of my Duty either to God or Man; for I do assure you my Father neither instructed me himself, nor (tho' Mr. Baldrick whom my Grandsather put me to School to, when the good old Man was dead, would have taught for me nothing) would

he

he permit me to go School, because one Day a Boy threw a Stone at me, and I throwing another at him, happened to break a Pane of Glass in an Alehouse Window, for which the People followed me home, and made my Father pay a Groat for it.

Upon this I received a most inhuman Correction from him, which was repeated every Morning and Night for six Days together; he stripped off all my Clothes, though in the Depth of Winter, and locked them up, leaving me without any Covering but my Shirt in the dark Back Kitchen, which, as you may remember, was in the Winter overslowed with Water, charging the Servants not to give me a Morsel of Food; and that I am alive is due to God's Providence, who, I hope, preserved me to be a Comfort to you.

However the Servants, though they had but a Groat a Day allowed them to live upon, used to give me Share of their Bread and Butter-Milk, and, when my Father was abroad, would permit me to warm my Body at the Kitchen Fire; nay, and as my Father said, it was too much Indulgence for me to sleep with his Footman, the poor Fellow used to let me lie down in the Day, where I spent most of my Time, and was neither allowed Pen, Ink, or Book to amuse me.

I will in some time give you a full History; but, at present, shall confine myfelf to Mr. A-e's Affair. I lived with him some time before I was bound Apprentice, in which I was used very well; but as foon as that was done the Scene was changed. Mrs. A-e, who was prodigiously fond of Gin, used to take so much of it, that she seldom knew what she did, and would often persuade her Husband to believe well or ill of me, just as she was drunk or sober: It was in one of these Fits The was when Tommy L—e landed, who is really a worthless conceited Fellow; and because he thought I did not sufficiently admire his fine finging, used, by way of Fun, to set Mrs. A——e on to abuse me and Mr. A-e, who is really a good-natured Man. I was discharged from fetching Half-quarterns to my Mistress; and there being an old Box in the Garret, in which Mr.

Mr. A—e kept some Musick-Books, she went up to examine it, and faid there were some of them stole: He, who did not know what number of Books there was in it, said, there was none gone; upon which, without the least Ceremony, she struck him in the Face, swearing by the great God, if he did not correct me, she would do it herfelf. I, who was not far off, and heard this Discourse, made the best of my way out of the House; which Mrs. A-e aking as a Proof of Guilt, and a villainous Maid she had joining with her, she earched the House, and swore she had lost nany things, as Brass Candlesticks, Bottles, 5c. all this poor Mr. A-e was obliged o agree to for Quietness sake. When I had staid a Day away, I wrote to him, elling him, I was furprized at his Suspiions of me, and that I was willing to reurn: He came directly with the Messenger, and brought me home. I stayed here till Night, when Mr. L-e comng in, and hearing I was there, called for his Horsewhip, and Mr. A-e, his Wife, and L—e were beating me for three Hours. Hours, to make me confess what I had done with the Books, swearing they would cut me to Death, if I did not own. I was forced one time to say that I sold them another, that I gave them away, to get little Respite; so, when they had made make confess to what they pleased, I was put the Bed, and locked in, in order to be sent the Newgate next Day.

I stayed all Night, never slept, and a the next Day did not eat a Morsel. 1 the Evening they were rehearfing Comu when I shot back the Lock of my Prison and finding the other Door open, I too off my Shoes, and crept down stairs, go to the Street, and run five Streets Lengt in my Stockings: What Advantage tl Maid might make of finding the Doc open and me gone I know not, as Mr A---e faid she had lost some of her Jewel Things the poor Woman never had in he Life; and so far I was from a Thought taking any thing of theirs, that I did no take my Hat, a Shirt, or any thing el with me. Now all the Reason I can eve devise for her using me so, was, I believe because I once saw her and L—e toying on the Bed together. So now, my Dear Mother, as I sear I have taken up too much of your Time already, I shall conclude, with assuring you

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 259

I am,

With the greatest Tenderness, Respect and Duty,

Your affectionate Son,

J. PILKINGTON.

This Account of my poor Child's Sufrings threw me into what they call An listerick Cholick, under which I languished nany Days; but my Hour was not yet ome, nor had my Sorrows reached their ummit. But of that in due place.

But to return to my Seat behind the counter, where I was tolerably content with my Situation, except for the Concern felt for my Children, from whom I ould feldom disengage my Thoughts, though the sad Remembrance grieves my Soul.

Soul. I must proceed: I went to indulge a pleasing Fit of Melancholy into Westmin. ster-Abbey,

Where breathing Paint, and speaking Marbles shew

What Worthies form the hallow'd Mole below.

I wandered through the Cloysters, reading the Inscriptions till it grew duskish. hastened to the great Gate, but was instantiely shocked to find I was locked into the solitary Mansions of the Dead: I called a loud to no purpose, except to fright mysee with my own Voice, reverborated through Long sounding Isles, and intermingle Graves.

'Tis scarce in the power of Imagination in paint the Horror which possessed me, expecially as, by the Glimpses of the Moor the Statues, which had before been Subject of Amusement to me, now looked dream ful, when each Mole-hill Ant swelled to huge Olympus; I knew not what to describe

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 261

but, if possible, take Sanctuary at the Altar.

I went up to the Iron Wicket, which opens into that part of the Abbey where Divine Service is performed, and to my unspeakable Happiness, pulled it open: I thought to fit down in one of the Pews till Morning, till, recollecting the Church was full of Rats, my Terrors were again renewed, and I had Inclination to go into the Isles, yet, how strong a Passion is Fear? the very Look of them terrified me; till, at length gathering Courage, even from Defpair, I went to the Communion Table, took off from thence a Carpet, which covered it, and thinking I could no where be so secure from those Vermin as in the Pulpit, I, with great Difficulty, dragged it up, where finding also a Velvet Cushion, I feated myself, and laid the Cushion under my Head, wrapping even my Face up with the Carpet.

I endeavoured all in my Power, by the Force of Reason and Religion, to conquer the Terrors which seized me; I restected that God was every where, and able to defend defend me; that he was not flow to hear nor impotent to fave; and also that the Church was peculiarly under his Care, as confecrated to Acts of Holiness, and both relying on his Providence, and committing to his Protection, I found my Mine as tranquil and composed, as if I had beer at home in my Bed, and fell into a deep Sleep: And here, tho' I may be though whimsical or superstitious for it, I cannot avoid relating my Dream, produced, no doubt, by the same Set of Ideas which had possessed my waking Thoughts, and still held their place in Sleep.

I imagined myself to be exactly where I was, and that suddenly the Graves gave up their mighty dead, who walked in martial Array before me; I thought, by some secret intuitive Knowledge, I became acquainted not only with their Names, but also with their Aspects. Many crowned Heads and sceptered Hands stalked by me in venerable Majesty: Henry V. clad in Armour, drew in a particular manner my Attention, insomuch that I could not for bear blessing him; I thought he smiled, and, with a placid Air, returned my Salutation, and faid, "I should have been "Great, if, when I had conquered France,

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 263

I had not married the perfidious Daughter of it, who at the Age of Thirty-four poisoned me. This Crime of hers has been truly visited on all our unhappy Race, who are now quite extinct."

I said, Thanks, Gracious Monarch. Jedisappeared, and two Persons struggling or a Diadem next approached. Death, besolution, and Ruin were spread around tem, till at length, a surly-looking Felw destroyed them both, and all their riends.

Hero appeared, who held in one Hand delay Roses and white, so blended that they bked lovely to the Eye; he seemed once twice to smell to them, when instantly Flowers saded and died, while in their lace, appeared a large Bagos Money.

Next came a squat, square-faced King, to held in his right-hand sour bloody eads, one of whom I thought I knew to be that of Anna Bullen, and the other that of the Marquis of Surrey.

A fweetly blooming Youth, whose Por trait was just at my Back in the Pulpit, ap peared and vanished like my Dream, or of which I startled by the Chimes; finding the Bell tolled Four, and knowing th early Service did not begin till Six, once more endeavoured to compose myse to Reft.

I must reassume my Dream just where broke off, as it really occurred to me. lovely Lady made her Entrance, holding Plato in one Hand, and the Bible in the other; two Men, by Force, put a Crov on her Head, at which she seemed to rified, when immediately came a Wom with a Countenance like Magara, attend by a Train of Fellows, with Cords, Axe and Hatchets, Wheels, and other Imp ments of Death and Torture, waited again by Persons, who, by their ho Vestments, I hoped would be, at least h mane; but, alas! instead of comforting t lovely Lady, they forced the above-fa Fury, who feemed for once inclined to p er, to permit those savage and inhuman sutchers to cut off the loveliest, the most carned Head that ever, from the prime creation, adorned a Woman.

But to the unspeakable Happiness of Freat-Britain, this detestable Wretch told le, as I thought, that Philip of Spain pointed her, in Hopes of marrying her after Elizabeth, then a Prisoner in the lower.

I was tired with these shadowy crowned leads passing by me, like those in Macbeth and wished to see the sweetly inspired, Laul-wreathed Poets advance; my Wish was amediately gratisted, and a merry old ellow appeared, who was, as it were Jest, lashing a whole Swarm of Friars:

Piec'd, patch'd, and pye-bal'd, linseywoolsey Brothers,

Bare-headed, sleeveless some, and shirtless others.

Pope.

nd though the Blows were dealt pretty int, they affected to smile at them.

Vol. II. N Next

Next appeared a Queen, to whom a Gentleman, with a fweet but melancholy Countenance, humbly presented a Volume of inimitable Poetry, as he was the Prince of Poets in his Time: His Gloriana received it graciously, and putting her Hance in her Pocket gave him a large Bag; I supposed it had been filled with Gold, but the Poet opening it, found nothing in it but Grains, such as they feed the Hogs with of which he put a large Handful into his Mouth, and instantly dropped down.

The Concern I felt for him awaked methe Bell tolling for Morning Prayer, and the Sexton missing the Carpet, and supposing the Church had been robbed, was almost beside himself, till I called to him and bade him not be frighted, there was nothing gone; the Man stared at me, I begged him to come and help me down, for I found myself so weak I could scarce move.

I then told him by what odd Accident I came there: He feemed amazed that I outlived it, and fwore heartily he would not have been in my Place for all the World.

l begged of him to get somebody to call ne a Chair; he went himself for one, and vith great Good-nature, brought from his wn House a small Phial, with some Cherrybrandy in it, and a Tea cup in his Pocket; am sure I wanted a Cordial, and therebre took a little of it, though not withut obliging him to accept of Payment for

When I returned Home, my Servant, ho had fat up for me all Night, was mazed to see me so pale and dirty, for see old Carpet had sufficiently soiled my pparel; but, lest she should conceive a set Opinion of me, I told her where I seen, and went to Bed; I slept for two lours, and awoke extremely ill, notwithlanding which I cleaned myself, and went to my Shop.

A young Gentleman, but very gravely eft, was my first Customer; he asked me e Price of an old Print in the Window, id seemed surprized at my asking Half a sown for it, assuring me it was not worth Groat; I said, I was sure he was too god a Judge not to know the Value of any Print taken out of Montfaucon's Antiquities: He said, he wondered why, since I knew the Value of the Author, I should be so tasteless as to cut one of them out of the Work, which in many Places ferved to illustrate it, particularly in the Medals: I assured him I had not done it, but had bought them amongst a Number of others. The Gentleman perceiving I spoke very faintly, faid, he believed I was not well; I affured him I was so ill, it was with infinite Difficulty I spoke at all; hedemanded of me, who was my Physician? I said, I had none fince my dear Father died, who was one of the Faculty: Then, Madam, faid he, allow me to have that Honour; fo feeling my Pulse, he ordered me to be bled, which greatly relieved my poor Head, which, with the Agitation of Spirit I had fuffered over Night, aked ready to split. As this Gentleman gave me his Attendance as long as I had the least Complaint, I should, I think, be highly ungrateful not to acknowledge my Obligation to Dr. Lawfon.

And

And indeed, I must here say, I never met with more learned, more generous, or more humane Gentlemen than Physicians; yet as no general Rule is without an Exception, Dr. W-lk-r refused me a Subscription, altho' every other Physician had, on my dear Father's Account, relieved his unhappy Family; but he alledged it would disoblige Mr. P-n; I know not but it might; yet how he came to fear him more than the rest of the World did, that I know not, but any Excuse will serve a Man to fave five Shillings; perhaps he could not spare them, as it is more than probable, were he fee'd according to his Skill, he might not be worth a fingle Marvedi; and for many Reasons, he ought not to be fevere on any Woman's Chaacter, let him amend the Females of his own Family first, a Task, I fear he will iever be able to perform.

I might also give the same Advice to Dr. O—ns, whose two Sisters took a olitary Walk over Essex-Bridge every Evening, perhaps to say their Prayers.

N 3

270 MEMOIRS of

But to return to Albion. I had one Evening been invited abroad, and at my Return, my Servant told me there had been two very fine Gentlemen to visit me, who would not leave their Names, but faid they would come the next Morning. Accordingly they did; one of whom I knew to be Lieutenant Southwel, fince dead, and the other the L-d V--t D-le; Mr. Southwel, who had been many Years acquainted with me, feemed rejoiced to fee me, but my Lord looked on me with the utmost Contempt, nay, with such an Air, as I had never before met with from any Gentleman, and cried, "Prithee, come . away, I thought you were to take me " to a Girl of Sixteen;" though, mem. he was at that time married to his present Lady, who is, by all Accounts, a very great Beauty: I affured his Lordship I had been once Sixteen, but as it happened fixteen Years had rolled over fince that bloom. ing Scafon, and that, to my great Mortification, I could not arrest old Father Time: Mr. Southwel very politely faid, ! should be always young; but my Lorc urging his Departure, he whispered me, that he would come and pass the Evening with me.

He kept his Word, and gave me a long Detail of the Calamities he had suffered on Board a Man-of-War, where, because some saucy Fellow called him a Bastard, and he in Return, broke his Head, the Captain confined him sixteen Weeks to his Cabin; but learning that he was very ill, he permitted him to come upon Deck; he was supported by two Men, weak, cold, and trembling, as he assured me, and ready to saint, so that he was obliged to sit down; upon which the Captain demanded how he dare to sit down in his Presence, or to wear, his Hat? so he sirst knocked it off, and then threw it into the Sea.

These Indignities, said he, so highly provoked me, that I retired to my Cabin, resolved, if ever I set my foot on Shore, to call the Captain to an Account for them. Accordingly, as soon as we were on English Ground, I challenged him, for which Ofence I was mutated eighteen Months pay; so here is the History of poor Dick for you.

I was fenfibly touched with his Narration, and could not help reflecting how terribly it must be to Gentlemen of Family and Education, to bear with Insults from Wretches so far beneath them, as those Marine Commanders frequently are, who are perhaps advanced for being abject, and no fooner are they advanced, but they become insolent Tyrants.

And indeed, I believe this is eternally the Case; for it is a constant Remark, that the worst Masters and Mistresses, are those who have been Servants themselves; they know what Frauds they have committed when in the like Situation, and confequently pry into such low Affairs, as Perfons of genteel Birth, and generous Education could never think of, and even if they were informed of them, would chuse to overlook.

Mr. Southwel then told me, Lord D-le had abused me all Day, tho for what Cause I know not; but, with Blunt Ben, in Love for Love, I merrily told my Sea Officer, that as for my Lord's Love or Liking, I valued it not of a Rope's End,

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 273

End, and that, mayhap, I liked him as little as he did me.

I almost forced him to drink a Pint of Wine with me, and would have also forced Half a Guinea on him, but his Spirit would not admit of that.

I was so highly provoked at Lord D——le's Insolence and Pride, so little becoming the Character of a Nobleman, that I could not sorbear writing some Lines on so proper a Subject for Satire, which Mr. Southwel had snatched from me, and directly carried to his Lordship.

I went next Morning to wait on Admiral Anson, with a Petition from the Sister of his Valet de Chambre, who happened to be the first Man shot in his first Sea Engagement, to whom, beside a Part of the Prize then taken, there was seven Years Wages due. I was shewn into the Back Parlour of a small House in Hancver-Square. It was well adorned with Books in Glass Cases, even from the Ceiling to the Floor; and on this Occasion, as I had a housand Pounds worth of Jewels lest with ne by Mr. Fisher, whose Father kept a

N 5

274 MEMOIRS of

Shop in Castle-street, Dublin, to dispose off for him, knowing how much Dress commands R spect, I put a pair of Diamond Ear-rings into my Ears, tied on a Diamond Solitaire, and as for Lace, and every other Appurtenance to suit those Ornaments, I had them of my own.

My glittering Appearance, and being it a Chair, foon brought the Admiral down in a rich Undress, as he supposed, by the Account delivered of me, I must be a Woman of Quality; my Eyes were fast engaged to the Books when he entered; he begged my Pardon for his Dishabille: turned, and said, I was glad for once the Learning and Valour so happil united.

But no fooner did he find that I had only a Petition to deliver, but his Countenance changed to the fevere, and he toleme, he believed People thought he had brought Home the Wealth of the India whereas he had not a fingle Shilling to command, no more than the meanest Saile aboard, the Money being all, as he said paid into the Treasury, from whence I

Ma

Man, without the utmost Difficulty, could extract one single Farthing of it; and having the Word of so great a Man, I really believed it: A sad Discouragement to all Sailors to venture their Lives, when even their very Admirals are not rewarded!

However, as I told the Admiral the Woman was actually starving, he gave me a Guinea for her.

When I returned Home, I found in my Shop Lord D-le, Mr. Skeffington, fince dead, and another Gentleman waiting, for me; Lord D---le asked what he had done, to provoke me to write with fo much Bitterness against him? Nay, my Lord, what had I done to disoblige you, or occasion your bestowing on me such gross Abuse, as Mr. Southwel affured me you. did? My Lord faid, upon his Honour it. was false, and taking me by the Hand, iffured me he would be a Friend to me, provided I gave him no more of my Pen; out as from that Hour to this, he never lid me any kind of Service, I thinks the Obligation void on my Side, and therefore present my Readers with the following Sketch of his inimitable Character.

N. 63

276 MEMOIRS of

To the Right Honourable the L—d V—ti

ATYRIC Muse! let me prevail-On thee to picture D————le: Fierce, as the furly northern Gale, Is proud, contemptuous D———le; What makes the Artist rot in Jail? Trusting the base-born D-le; The Rose-cheek'd Nymph turns wan, and pale. Touch'd by infectious D———le; Light Gossamer would turn the Scale, Weigh'd 'gainst the Wit of D——le Nay, were thy Virtues put to Sale, A Mite o'er-rates them, D--le: Honour and Equity shall fail, E'er practis'd once by D-le; For Hell may Charon hoist his Sail O'er Styx, to wast curst D———le: In short, my Subject now grows stale,

I'm tir'd with Rhymes to D-le;

And now, my L—d, as I believe I am the first Poet who ever celebrated the illustrious Name of St. L—dg—r, which Name, by your supposed noble, and right-well remembered Father's Account, you are as much intitled to, as I am to that of Plantagenet, I hope you will, according to your true Nobility, give me a hand-some Reward for this extraordinary Panegyric!

And here I cannot avoid relating, that I believe, the true Cause fhis L—d—p's Aversion to me, was this: A little Time after I was separated from my Husband, as it was quite the Mode to attack me, he employed one of his infernal Agents to inform me, he should be glad to drink a Dish of Tea with me; I told the Wretch I did not know his L—d—p, and therefore hoped he would excuse me.

But

But the Harridan, being resolved not: to lofe her Reward, told my L-d I would meet him somewhere, indeed I do not know the Place, and introduced to him a great, lusty, masculine Woman, dressed in a Calimanco Cap and Cloak, or long: Riding-hood. I believe his L-d-p wondered that fuch a Creature had made any Noise in the World; so telling her, he was forry he had given her the Trouble of coming there, he gave her a Guinea, and hastily departed.

A few Nights after this, W-rsd-lev had The Cure for a Scold, altered from Shakespear's Taming of a Shrew, into al Ballad Opera, by Mr. P ____n, played for his own Benefit; I wrote a flaming Prologue to it, in Honour of my fair Countrywomen, and W-r/d-le infifted on my going to fee it, affuring me, he would! have a Lettice secured entirely for me, ore any Friends I should please to bring, and would himself take care of placing me, and also guarding me safe out, for really I was very much afraid of receiving some Infult.

On these Promises I ventured to go; when behold! the Lettice was full; but that was no Matter, the Ladies, though my intimate Friends, quickly decamped, and Mrs. Dub-g, the Fidler's Wife, declared she had like to faint at the Sight of the odious Creature! the Rev. Mr. Gr-n also took to his Heels, so I had indeed the whole Lettice for me and my Company, which were two young Misses, Daughters to my Landlady.

My Gorgon Face, instead of turning my Enemies into Stone, clapped Wings to their Feet, and made them fly down Stairs, like fo many feathered Mercuries, Parlon and all, tho' he was bulky, and tipfy, and dull, and fo forth; tho' indeed, those Qualities might make him defcend with the greater Velocity, and give him a natural Alacrity in finking.

However, by their precipitant Flight, I got the front Row.

When the Play began, I forgot to keep up my Fan, and two Gentlemen of Diftinction in the Pit bowed to me; pre-Lently after the Orange Girl came up, and faid a Gentleman defired I would accept of half a Dozen Oranges; I asked who it was? and the shewed me a Person dressed in Scarlet, trimmed with Black; as I did not know him, I told her it was a Mistake, and a young Girl, who followed her in, faid, that was L-d D-le, and that the Compliment was intended for her; but the Orange Girl, calling her very familiarly by her Name, which was Nancy Raymond, swore to the contrary; for, said she, you know how you used my L-d. They talked to one another in the vulgar Tongue, being exceedingly well known to each other, having both followed the fame Occupation of Orange and Oysters Selling, and both came up Stairs into the World.

To compose the Animosity, I bought some Fruit, and though I really paid for it, I doubt not but his L—d—p did also.

When the Play was over, to which I most heartily repented that I went, W—rf-d—le came to put me into a Chair, said he would sup with me, and kept his Word.

I related to him the Play-House Adventure, and asked him what kind of a Man L—d D——le was? He told me, he was both a very loose, and a very ungenerous Man, Qualities which no way recommended him to me; so being honoured with a second Message from him, I, with an absolute, Sir, not I, dismissed me back the cloudy Messager.

But to return:

The next Day a most ugly, squinting, mean looking Fellow, whose good Clothes made his Awkwardness but the more conspicuous, came in to buy some Prints, his Mind was portrayed in his Countenance, where Impudence and Ignorance feemed to vie for Pre-eminence; however, he spoke o me with great Civility, and perceiving, by his Accent, that he was an Hibernian, asked him, how long he had been in London? Curiofity lead me into a great leal of Chat with him, and as he knew very great Family in Ireland, their Serrants at least, he was able to give me a good deal of Intelligence: I then enquired, vhether Business or Pleasure had brought him him to London? He faid, both; and pull ing out his Pocket-Book, told me, he would furprize me; I cannot fay indeed but he did; for he shewed me Dr. Swift' Head, engraven in Vellum, not in fize much larger than a small Locket, such a they wear in Rings, yet so extremely like the Original, that there was no Occasion to write the Name under it: Several more Pieces of the same curious Work he shewed to me, and faid, he hoped to make his Fortune by them in London.

I told him, I was afraid he would be unappointed, as rainting and Statuary were the Taste of the English Nobility beside, this is Work more suited to a Wo man than a Man; if I could do it, it might turn to Account to me. Upon which, or his own Accord, he begged I would pass his Works for mine, and that he would give me a third part of the Profit arifing from the Sale of them: he gave me to understand he very well knew who I wass and that our united Interest might be serv viceable to each other, an Offer I did not reject.

As he had many fine Mantlings cut, he could very quickly infert the Arms, so I desired he would finish one for General Ch-h-l; he obeyed me, and I waited on the old Gentleman with it, and a few complimentary Lines, which I have now forgot. I sent in my Presents, and the General desired I might be shewn in: He was in a very magnificent Drawing-room, adorned with Stucco Work, the opposite Door opened into a Garden, sull blown;—the General was seated on a rich Sopha, at a Table adorned with Dressing-plate. He desired I might sit down on a Sopha, opposite to him, and ordered this Servant to remove the Table; there were several Vases filled with Flowers, sweetly smelling round the Chamber; and, for my part, I rather imagined I was in some Asian Palace, than a House in Grosevenor-street.

He thanked me for my Present, "But, Madam, said he, it is to me quite useself less, as all my House is Stucco Work; however, if you'll be so kind as to come up stairs with me, we may perhaps find.
"fome-

of some Place, where a Nail may be driven " without Injury."

As the old Gentleman doubted I might possibly mistake his Meaning, he was going to explain himfelf; upon which I took up the Picture, and in very great Confusion made the best Speed out of his House.

I had not walked above twenty Yards, when one of the General's Footmen overtook me, who told me, his Master was afraid I-might fall in a Fever, if I walked in the Heat of so warm a Day, and therefore defired I would accept of a Guinea to pay my Chair: I took ir, and returned my Compliments.

As there was fomething humorous in the General's Behaviour, I addressed him the next Day in the following Lines:

To the Hon. Gen. CH-H-L.

Cutting your Coat of my Arms I loft; I por'd my Eyes, I soil'd my Rayment,

Not doubting of a gen'rous Payment:

When.

When, well I wot, your whole Design Vas bent to quarter your's with mine.

Curse on your plaguy Stucco Work; ure 'twas invented hy some Turk, 'o bid to Christian Art Desiance, and overturn each beaut'ous Science; Io Nail, forsooth, their Paste must enter Yould one were stuck in the Inventor!

But will a Chief of Marlborough's Strain, the Off'ring of the Muse disdain, or give her Reason to complain?

Should I be feiz'd by Bailiff's Setter, That must I say? that you're my Debtor; Thy, if they threat me with a Jail, I surely send to you for Bail.

The Muse and Hero ne'er should quarrel, ur Bays thrives best beneath your Laurel; our Province is to shine in Fight, t our's your noble Ácts to write.

billes' Deeds had lost their Glory, ill samous made by Homer's Story:

Nor can You eternize your Name, "Till we confign your Praise to Fame. Want damps the Poets genial Fire, Bounty can Thoughts sublime inspire; So, crusted o'er with Flint and Clay, 'The Di'mond scarce emits a Ray, 'Till disencumber'd of the Mold, Polish'd with Art, and set in Gold, Resplendent Glory it displays, And rivals Phabus' Noontide Blaze.

I never received any Answer to these Lines, but in a very short time after I heard the General was Dead.

I gave the young Man both his Coat of Arms and the Guinea; so we resolved next to address the Earl of Stair, then Veldt Marshal.

It is a very great Loss to me, that by the Ignorance of my Daughter half of my Writings were burned, for she never scrupled, if even the Fire was bad, to take a whole Bundle of them to enliven it; but whether this may be any Loss to the World I must leave to their Judgment. I can recollect but very few Lines of the Poem to his Excellency, which were as follows:

To his Excellency the Earl of STAIR.

Arma Virumque cano. Virg. Æn.

N Rome, when all was Happiness and Ease,

n the full Splendor of voluptuous Days, Their Chiefs neglected fought the filent Shade,

Fill loudly fummon'd to their Country's Aid.

'or when tempestuous Ills assault a Realm,
'hey call their ablest Pilot to the Helm;
'o guard their Freedom, to preserve their Fame;

o God-like Stair, fo Cincinnatus came!
Llike illustrious in their Country's Cause, uardians of dying Liberty and Laws.
.ccept, my Lord, this Off'ring, nor refuse

'he varied Labours of an artless Muse: so Herald can add Lustre to thy Birth, so Poet justly praise thy noble Worth; Yet let the fair Attempt Acceptance find, And my weak Sex plead to thy gen'rous Mind;

What Wonders then may I hereafter do? At once protected, and inspir'd by You!

A very fine young Gentleman undertook to deliver my Present to the Eatl, and a Servant shewed me into a Parlour. In a few Minutes the Gentleman returned, and faid my Lord defired to see me; so he handed me up into a full Levee of Stars; and different coloured Ribbons. As I had never before been in so august an Assembly, I was ready to die with Shame, especially as there was not one of my own Sex to keep me in Countenance. My Lord in a most polite manner thanked me for the Honour, as he termed it, I had done him; and the Noblemen, after his Example, feemed to contend who should praise me most; to which I could make no other Return than Courtefies and Blushes.

At length, the Earl of Stair said there was a Defect in the placing the Swords, which go through the Veldt Marshal's Arms, which which he would willingly have altered; and or ught me out a Print of the Noblemen's Arms, who held the same Dignity in France, is a Patern; I told his Lordship I could afily alter it: " Pray then do, Madam, ' returned he, for I admire your Work fo much, that I would willingly have it quite compleat." Accordingly, it was inished, and the next Morning I waited n his Excellency with it, when, to my reat Surprize, I had no Admission to him, ut a Footman brought down five Guineas o me.

I was not a little surprized at this sudden Alteration in his Lordship's Mind. But hat had the Fool, who did the Work, one? truly told Major Elliotson, that I nade a Hand of his Performances; he told ly Lord, — who vexed at being imofed upon, fent me the Trifle aboveientioned, which was not, by any means, Payment for the Labour and Curiofity of ie Work, and what, from a Person of is Station, I should not have thought an etraordinary Reward even for the Lines.

So, finding the Folly of the Man, I would not undertake to dispose of any more cut Vellum, but left him to make his most of it.

I should never have thought this Fellow worth speaking of, only that my Husband has said he was my Galiant, not that I owe any Reverence or Honour to him, or regard what he can say, any more than the idle Wind, but that I would not have such an Imputation laid on my Understanding, to say I made Choice of a low-born, ugly, illiterate Scoundrel. No, no; Mr. P—n may rest assured, that if I would have done him the Honour to exalt his Horn like that of an Unicorn, it should, at least, have been to me a Cornu-Copia.

But, alas! poor I, have been for many Years a Noun Substantive, obliged to stand alone, which, praise to the eternal Goodness! I have done, notwithstanding the various Esforts of my Enemies to destroy me, many of whom I have lived to triumph over, though they encompassed me on every Side, like so many Bulls of Basan: and though they should now kick up their Heels,

Heels, like so many wild Asses in the Valley of Geobron; though the Dunces should make Songs of me, and though

Envy shou'd my fairest Deeds belie,

I think it would not afflict me, but that I should be able to convince them I had, at least, Patience, Hope, and Charity, sufficient to make them ashamed of the Injuries they have been weak and wicked enough to offer.

Because I would now fairly challenge my most malicious Foes to answer from the Tribunal of their own Conscience, what Provocation I ever gave them to use me ill?

Whom have I defrauded or belyed? Nay, indeed, of whom have I spoke half the Evil which it was in my Power to do? There are few Characters immaculate, and had I an Inclination to retaliate Injuries, I am, I believe, able enough to do it.

And fometimes one has fo strong an Inclination to it, that it is hard to refish, especially when a Lady of Quality, (that is

by

Smith at G—n, and kept the Sign of the Horseshoe there, as I have frequently heard the late Lord Montgarret relate) could, because I presumed to beg she would do me the Honour of being a Subscriber to me, a Privilege I thought a long Acquaintance might have entitled me to take, order my Maid to be kicked; and as I am really ashamed to use her Ladyship's Words on the Occasion, being much too indecent for a Repetition, methinks she might have spared them, especially to one who knew her too!

When she was a Maid, if she e'er was a Maid;

When afraid of a Man, if she e'er was afraid.

Heaven knows poor * * * * * * * * had but the Leavings of half the Town; but he botched up a broken Reputation with Matrimony, an admirable Salve!

As the was pleased to say, my Life could be nothing but a continued Series of —, I am ashamed to speak the Word; — I dare say had it been so, she would have purchased my Book sooner than the Bible, to indulge her private Meditations, especially if I had the wicked Art of painting up Vice in attractive Colours, as too many of our Female Writers have done, to the Destruction of Thousands, amongst whom Mrs. Manly and Mrs. Haywood deserve the foremost Rank.

But what extraordinary Passions these Ladies may have experienced, I know not; far be such Knowledge from a modest Woman: Indeed Mrs. Haywood seems to have dropped her former luscious Stile, and, for Variety, presents us with the inspid: Her Female Spectators are a Collection of trite Stories, delivered to us in stale and worn-out Phrases: bless'd Revolution!

Yet, of the two, less dang'rous is th' Offence,

To tire the Patience, than missead the Sense. O 3 And

And here give me Leave to observe, that amongst the Ladies who have taken up the Pen, I never met with but two who deferved the Name of a Writer; the first is Madam Dacier, whose Learning Mr. Pope, while he is indebted to her for all the Notes on Homer, endeavours to depreciate; the second is Mrs. Catherine Philips, the matchless Orinda, celebrated by Mrs. Cowly, Lord Orrery, and all the Men of Genius who lived in her Time.

I think this incomparable Lady was one of the first Refiners of the English Numbers; Mr. Cowly's, though full of Wit, have somewhat harsh and uncouth in them, while her Sentiments are great and virtuous; her Diction natural, easy, slowing, and harmonious.

Love she wrote upon with Warmth but then it was such as Angels might share in without injuring their original Purity Her Elegy on her Husband's Daughter, i a Proof of the Excellency and Tendernes of her own Heart, rarely met with in Step-mother; nor could I ever read i without Tears, a Proof it was wrote from her Heart.

And

And dear Orinda! gentle Shade! sweet Poet! Honour of thy Sex! Oh, if thou hast Power to do it, inspire me! for sure Thou art in the happy Bowers of Bliss, praising that eternal Goodness, who, to the Loss of this World, took Thee early away to adorn the Holiest of Holies, where in Songs of Love, not ill-essay'd below, great Saint Thou continuest to celebrate thy Maker.

Ob pour thy Spirit o'er my Lays, Cælestial Melody inspire! Sweet as the Royal Psalmist's Lyre, That I with Thee may bymn his Praise.

I cannot, except my own Country-woman, Mrs. Grierson, find out another female Writer, whose Works are worth reading; the indeed had a happy and well-improved Genius. I remember she wrote a very fine Poem on Bishop Berkley's Bermudian Scheme; the Plan of it was this: She supposes that the Night before St. Par I suffered, an Angel appeared to comfort him with the suture Prospect of the Church, and the Growth of Christianity; the Angel informs him that in such a Year there shall be born in the Western Island a great Apostle, who shall be known by this Token:

0 4

and

'Tis he from Words first rids Philosophy, And lays the dull material System by, Affrights the daring Libertine to find Naught round him, but the pure, all-holy Mind;

The blushing Sinner from his Covert draws

Of Matters various Forms, and Motions Laws,

His only Fortress from the Atheist takes, And his atomic World at once unmakes.

I am forry that I cannot recollect any more of this Poem, or that the Prophecy contained in it of the Bishop's converting the Indians was, by the Avarice of some in Power, frustrated; for surely he was well stitled for that holy Mission, having Learning and Innocence in Persection. Nor do I at all doubt that had this true Embassador of Christ been enabled to pursue the sacred Purpose of his Soul, but the Power of working Miracles would have been added to his other heavenly Gists.

I have been accused of writing bitterly against the Clergy; I never did, but when they forgot their own High Calling; one B in particular, fays, "that I " Alexander the Copper-smith have done " him much Wrong, in talking about " Pence, and Farthings, and such small " Coin, whereas he has within these two " and twenty Years, given me the Sum total of fixteen Pounds Irifb, in hard "Gold, out of which, had I been indus-" trious, I might have made a comfortable " Livelihood:" But I am afraid, had he been in my Case, he would have starved. Happy for him his Father was born before him, and Happy is the Son whose Father is gone to the Devil, is an old Proverb. But indeed, now my L-, I take it a little unkindly, that you should declare in public, that you had me, as well as my Maid, fur la Tapis; methinks, the you are a Conjurer, you need not be a

Blab:

Blab: Oh, fy! is it thus you return my generous Passion? for, by your own Account, you did not pay me well; why Juggy Mackshane, the Chairman's Wife, had a better Piice from you, and you made her Son a Parson, while you quarrelled! with mine for having his Button holes worked in the best Taste, and told him, he must be very wicked to be guilty of fuch Extravagance: Were not you a little: cenforious, think you? Why you, tho in the Vauward of your Youth, have yet a strong Dash of the Cox-b, and might: excuse it in a Boy. Well, but as these said! fixteen Pounds are so insisted on, I acknowledge to have received them, and should have thanked you, but that you fent me Word, in London, you did not know who I was, and that it was very impudent in me to apply to you for Charity; but lest you should again forget me, I am willing to be your sweet Remembrancer: And, oh. by our chaste Love, I conjure you to make my Husband a Dean; sure this you ought to do, when you fay you made him a Cuckhold; besides, you know it was in that sweet Hope I yielded up my Heart ; then be a gentle Mediator between us, plead for me as you did for the fair * Quaker; tho' Historians relate, that your Lady would have been as well pleased, had you been less assiduous in that Affair.

And now, I confess, I am a little spiteful, but it is only Jealousy; send me an hundred Pounds to cure the Anguish your Insidelity has given me, and I will try toconquer my hopeless ill-star'd Passion!

Your L——'s Poetry in my Praise I. never can forget; and as it would be a Loss to the World, if any Part of so justly an admired Author's Works should be buried in Oblivion; take, oh World! the following Lines:

I scorn to drag about a Flame

For any She, that thinks my Love a

Blame,

Pll take a Resolution to be free, Without Return, I scorn to burn, And oh! I will be free.

300 MEMOIRS of

Your second Poem is, I confess, a little obscure, yet, no doubt, may have much Meaning in it:

Ob thou,
fow fow, Bow Wough!

And indeed, I remember another R—R—Author, who entertained some very polite Company with the following Epitaph, written as he assured us, by himself, it is very laconic:

Here lies Major Brady, and St. Comeen, Sure such a Saint, and such a Major never were seen.

If the curious Reader cannot digest this Heaven-born Verse, why let him be graminiverous, and chew the Cud.

But pray, my L—, do not you think it was a little ill-judged of you, to attack my Character at the Expence of your own? and to describe yourself as such a Cormorant in Love, that you must have two Females at once; why, Turk Gregory never did such Feats in Arms;

Oh rav'nous Hell Kite! Wou'dst thou have Maid, and Mistress At one fell * Swop?

But prithee now, for I think I am entitled to talk a little familiarly to you; do not boast of Abilities, either of Mind or Body, which you never had; no Person living will believe you, any more than they would me, if I should tell them I had been a great Beauty, when they could see no Remains of it.

But you are, as the good Man said of Nero, a very Wag!

Hang it, why should you and I go to Logger-heads? Order your Equipage to drive here to-morrow Morning, and let us buss, as we used to do, and be Friends.

Otherwise, I have two or three Pieces of ^{*} This Word admits of various Readings, some call it Savoop, some Souse, some Savop, which latter I chuse.

of the same Stuff, of which I have give: you Samples at your Service.

Lord, 'tis a strange Thing that all B will needs be Authors! now would the avoid manifesting their Dulness, we th illiterate might conclude they were Me of profound Erudition, and that on tha Account, they were advanced to the high Stations: but the Devil owes some of them a Shame, and is, when they do hi Work, an excellent Paymaster; yet it strange, this same Dulness is not confine to them, it descends to their Sons, witne. our celebrated Comedy, The Suspicion Husband, which, but for it's neither have ing one Character well drawn, any Plo any thing like a Sentiment, and wrote to in a gallimawfry Stile, might be a goo Performance; but as long as it is stamped with a Name, it passes current, tho' Stell ling No-Senfe.

But, my L—dB—, tho' I have digreffed from you, yet fee my Love! I return again: Ah, it was well I did not, eve from Scripture, pick up an unfavory Simile; I am much offended that you should fay, when I was last at Shrift with your Holiness, that we had no better Accommodation for our Feast of Love, but a Carpet, whereas I insist on it, that the Penance you enjoyned me, was as easy as a Down-bed could make it; so here I invalidate your Evidence in one Point, and the rest of your Accusation naturally falls to the Ground.

But being now tired at laughing at you,
I'll tell you an Arabian Tale. There was a really generous Man, who built a fine Pavilion, to which were an Hundred Openings; as the Poor had free access to it, they were relieved by him at every Opening and Avenue; they blessed his Goodness, and his Fame slew far.

There was in his Neighbourhood the Son of an old Miser, who was left immensely rich; he was of a fordid Temper, yet emulous of Praise, so he built such another Pavilion, and in like Manner distributed Alms; it so fortuned, that one old Man attacked him seven times in the same Morning at seven of the Entrances, he met him again at the eighth, and asked for an Alms, at this he lost all Patiences and cried, "Did not I seven times reculieve you?" "Ah, quoth the poor

" Man, Lord bless my Lord Aboulcasem

"I have walked three hundred time

" round his Pavilion, been three hundred "times relieved, and yet I am certain he " does not know my Face.

So, to apply the Story, God bless my dear loved Lord Kingsborough, who gives Hundreds without blowing a Trumpet before his good Deeds, or defaming the Characters of those whom his Bounty blesses.

I have often been surprized at one of our C—s, which, to shew my Charity, I will insert.

O Lord, who alone workest great Marvels! send down upon our B—— and C—— the healthful Spirit of thy Grace.

Marvellous would it be indeed, if they had either Health, Spirit, or Grace; no Doubt but the learned Compilers of the Liturgy had their own Reasons for this supernatural Invocation; but why nothing less than a Miracle

Miracle should bless these, any more than any other Order of Men, I leave to some future Commentators, and hope they will oblige us with Annotations on this extraordinary Ejaculation.

I would not incur the Censure of the Cl—— so far as to give a Hint that they are not sound: No, no, many of them are; but then it is so sound as things that are hollow, Impiety hath made a Feast of them, and now that their Bones are marrowless, their Blood is cold, and Speculation dwells not in their Eyes; they hate us Youth. Gorbellied K——, Bacon sed! ah, would we had the shaking of their Bags! I knew one of them, who, without the least Study, wrote the following two elegant and learned Lines:

Yon stanting Mountains glow with blue Marine,

And you cornuted Moons two Horns give shine.

I know the Gentlemen had too much Modesty and Diffidence of their own superior Talents to give their Works to the Pressibut I hope, as they are charitable, they won't be displeased, as they are above making Money of their Performances, that I should, since they, though but little, serve to swell my Volume, and, no doubt, will edify my Readers. I think I have nothing to boast of as a Writer, but a great Memory for if I could not have retained Shakespear. Million, &c. and the great Authors I have last mentioned, to give a Taste of their Wit, when I was myself at a Loss, I do not know how I could ever have compassed three Volumes of Memoirs.

Indeed if I had printed all the Poetry that has been fent me for that purpose, since I came to this Kingdom, it would have proved as odd a Medley, as any thing ever yet exhibited to publick View. I suppose every one who fancied they had Wit, had a mind to see how it would look in Print; but I must beg to be excused. Though the learned Mr. Timothy Ticklepitcher presented very hard for a Place, it would be a strong Proof of my Vanity, to insert his anti-sublime Compliments to me.

Anı

Another poetical Gentleman wrote me a long Letter in a Text Hand, which put me into a Palpitation of the Heart, as I was about that time threatened, (for certain scandalous Truths I have been guilty of relating) with some Law; and truly I hate that as much as Sir John Falstaff did Security: When I, in plain English, set down undeniable Facts, they menace me with Law, I would as lieve they would stop my Mouth with Ratsbane: But I find I am like Sir John, not only witty myself, but am also the Occasion that Wit is inothers; there is not an Halfpenny Paper can peep its Head out, but presently my Name must be dragged in by Head and Shoulders to grace it. But to the Letter: Having recovered my Spirits, I read it over; and found a great many Compliments, with a Promise, that the profound Author would wait on me at Four o'Clock. I never thought of it till the time appointed, when

The punctual Devil kept his Word.

308 MEMOIRS of

I own I supposed he came to see if he coul

Convey out of my Box of Hints by a Tric Sincerely believing he dealt with Old Nic

And I always suspect Falshood to lurk up der a sull Peruke. He just came in win a huge fat Man, as fat as Butter, with him but would not stay, for which Reason will not print his fond Letter, so I think am even with him. If I were any wa given to be proud, I think I have a greated of Reason to be so, since I cannot go any where, as I am not very welknown, but I hear some Piece of my own History, quite new. I am seen in this Place and to ther Place, and say something mighty witty to be sure!

I do not wonder that Persons of Fortune and Distinction of this Kingdom go to England to spend their Time and Estates; since here, be you as chaste as Ice, or pure as Snow, thou shalt not escape Calumny, especially among your half-bred, half-witted Gentry, but

Let my unhappy Tale be falsely told

By the rash Young, or the ill-natur'd Old;

Let-ev'ry Tongue it's various Censures

chuse,

Absolve with Coldness, or with Spite as-

Fair Truth, at last, her radiant Beams, shall raise,

And, Malice vanquish'd, beighten'd Vir-

In London almost every one, in the midng State of Life, has some Employment Diversion to kill their Time; and here s the reverse, we are all Gentry, wheree the Females have no Amusement but t of SLANDER.

Where

Rufa, with her Comb of Lead, Whispers that Sappho's Hair is red.

I should be very glad, e'er they look for Mote in my Eye, they would be pleased pull the Beam out of their own. I could ntion Numbers of these Scandal-mongers, who have faid, " Oh Lord! may be " she'll put us down in her Memorials!" But go on, incorrigible Dunces, too contemptible for my Notice: All I shall beg of the Men is, never to believe any thing that it faid of me by a Woman, as it is more than Four to One it is a Lye.—But as the great Milton's Genius could even descence to Hell, fo I think I must mention one Mrs. Ir—d—ll, who hearing I got Money for my Work, a thing she could never do. exclaimed bitterly against me, nay, ever kept her Bed-for a Week on Account of it, and wrote two or three very stupid Papers against me; and though she could not shew her Wit, at least shewed Envy, Malice, and all Uncharitableness.

I know a very ingenious Gentleman, who, whenever he sees a Parcel of Females seated at their Tea, names the Chamber Pandamonium; and Dr. Young, in one of his Satires, says, Tea! bow I tremble at the dreadful Stream!

As Lethe fatal to the Love of Fame;

What Devastations on thy Banks are seen, What Shades of mighty Names that once have been?

And I really cannot remember ever to have seen a Set of Ladies tippling this Liquor but Scandal strait ensued; ay, even amongst our new Teachers, commonly called Moravians, amongst whom I had, in London, the Missortune to live, and whom, hough they took themselves to be inspired, I really always believed to be under the Delusion of Satan.

One of the holy Sisters once told me the Devil inspired Milton: ay, and me into the Bargain: Truly she did his infernal Majesty the greatest Honour he ever yet received, and I could not avoid thinking her either very ignorant or very wicked; but I comforted myself with hoping that the former was her Fault, and that she did not know how heinous a Sin she committed, when she robbed the Maker of his Glory, and attributed his best Gifts and Graces to the common Enemy of Man. I think think I might justly apply to these Sectaries Mr. Pope's Lines:

312 MEMOIRS of

'Tis your's a Bacon, and a Locke to blame,

ANewton's Genius, and a Seraph's Flame;
But, oh! with One, Immortal One dif-

pense

The Source of Newton's Light, and Ba-con's Sense!

Content each Emanation of his Fires,

That beams on Earth; each Science he inspires,

Each Art he prompts, each Charm he can create,

Whate'er he gives, is giv'n for you to hate: Go on, by all divine in Man, unaw'd,

But learn, ye Dunces, not to mock your God.

I believe these Wretches would be very proud of being persecuted; but our Governors, of the same Mind with the witty and gallant Emperor Julian, vulgarly called the Apostate, will neither hinder them to assemble, nor preach, any more than than he did the Galileans, unless they preach Sedition, and then they come under the Penalty of the Law.

Poor Julian! the Christians murdered him, for not permitting them to murder each other. St. Gregory the Younger, preaching old St. Gregory's Funeral Sermon, forty Years after the Death of Julian when one would have thought Resentment night be also dead, (if he had any Cause for it) has these remarkable Words: "And onow, fays he, here lies my Uncle dead, who delivered you from the Persecution ' of that old Bull-burning Tyrant Julian: ' Now, who had a greater Hand in his Death than my Uncle? For once, when ' he and his Captain of the Archers came in to hear Mass, had he not suddenly gone away, my Uncle would have ' kicked him." The Translator says, he ad more Difficulty with this Passage than Il the rest of the Work; for he would ain have had the Kicking intended for the Captain of the Archers, not being able to onceive, that the Emperor of the World VOL. II. should should be afraid that an old Priest should kick him.

But the old Priest prophesied that such Day this Apostate should die, and truly took especial Care that his Prophecy should be fulfilled, by hiring one of the Emperodown Soldiers to put him to Death.

I could fay fomething more; why should not; nay, out it must: I believe, if m favourite Apostle St. Pau! had not behave himself with more good Manners than on modern New Lighters, he would not have almost persuaded his Auditors to be Chistians; how noble is his Answer on the Ocasion?

But he was as remarkably a fine Gentl man, as he was a Saint, a Martyr, and Christian; like Dr. Delany, who preaching goes even to the dividing of the Blood and Spirit. And let me here, de Sir, beg you will fulfil a Promise you game many Years ago, that you would a tend my last Moments; if I send to you will you resuse to chear a dying Sinner will Hope of Peace and Pardon; for the Doctrin of Damnation is now so-universally rece

ve

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 315

ved, that Half the World are cast into Def-

These poor Enthusiasts used, in London, o steal every thing they could lay their Hands on from me, insomuch that at last they stole my one Pair of Shoes; and yet' they brought Scripture Authority for Theft, for they faid the Children of Israel borrowed fewels of Gold and Silver of the Egyptians, which they ran away with, and they soiled be Egyptians. I remember I once mentiuned this Passage to Dr. Delany, who Inderstanding Hebrew perfectly, turned wer to it to there, where it is very differently related: For the Egyptians finding o many Plagues brought on them, and particularly the Leprofy, with which these People were all infected, ordered them to lepart, but they declared they would not o, unless their Hire was paid to them, and lso fo many Changes of Apparel, and ewels of Gold, given to support them in heif Pilgrimage; how they behaved themelves in the Wilderness, is so well set forth n the Old Testament, that it would puzzle wiser Head than mine to know how they became the peculiar Favourites of an partial and unprejudiced Deity.

Indeed it were to be wished, that ther this learned and excellent Divine, some other of equal Abilities, if such me be found, would oblige the World with new Translation of the Cld Testament, sinuas we now have it, it seems filled with Incognities, Indecencies, and shocking Abilities, such as the Holy Spirit could necessary have dictated, whose Body is Light, a whose Shadow Truth.

I beg pardon for this rambling Digg fion, and hope the Divines will not cenfi me for it, as I only prefume to give the Hints, which their superior Knowled may improve upon,

And justify the Ways of God to Man.

For I intend not this Address to the norant Part of the Clergy, who would may of them be more fit to till the Earth, the plant or water the Gospel, but to the leaded, just, and pious, that they may remove a scruples from weak Minds, raise up the

it are fallen, and finally, beat down Salan der our Feet, which God of his infinite ercy enable them to do, through the Meand Mediation of our Lord Fesus Christ. But once more to return to my Shop. e Afternoon two young Gentlemen came o it, one of whom asked me for some a; I told him, I did not fell any, but t there was a Coffee-House next Door, ere he might be supplied: He asked me, uld not I give a Dish of Tea to a Friend, 1 Relation? I faid, yes, with Pleasure: hy then, said he, this Gentleman is Dean rade's Son, of Cork, and my Name is _nd_n; as his Father was married to gadier Meade's Widow, I gave them an ritation into the Parlour, and ordered ne Tea to be got ready. I was really y glad to see any Person from Ireland, ticularly those I was allied to, nor could conceive that they came in that manner ly to infult a Woman, who never ofded either of them; indeed, as for the an's Son, I must acquit him, for he did affront me, but I took it ill he should ng with him a Fellow he knew defigned There

There was nothing groß, indecent, abut five, or unmannerly, which this Wretch did not, without the least Provocation, say to me, till, at length, though I am not really of a passionate Disposition, I lost all Patience, and thinking myself very much his Betters, I asked him, whether his Father continued to sell Butter-milk to the Poor at a Penny a Quart, with his own Hand, in a hard Season, when every other Person gave their's away.

Upon this he very politely threatened to kick me, but as he was then at a great Distance from his own Dunghill, and I am sure I give Castle-Bl—nd—n its proper Title when I stile it one, I was not in the least intimidated, and only bade him go shew his Slaves how choleric he was, and Make bis Bondmen tremble.

And here excuse me, Sir, if I give your Picture to the World. When you make Love, if any but the leaden-darted Cupia ever touched your unworthy, groveling, base Heart, your Argument is that of a High-

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 219

Highwayman's, you bring a loaden Pistol, clap it to the Fair-one's Bosom, and say, "De-" liver your Treasure, or you are dead."

Could not you have taken your accient Father, the old Stick-picker's Advice, and have coaxed the Girl, and have given her a Cherry-coloured Top-knot? but you

Were like the baughty, hot-brain'd Spaniard,

Instead of Love, you brought a Poignard

And filthy as your rotten Leg, and more corrupted Soul, must have been every thing you could produce; for thou art the Quintessence of Filth, and I am weary of writing, when every thing base, every thing low, every thing insolent is the Theme, and all comprised in pretty Master Facky Bl—nd—n.

As I have mentioned an Attempt to write a Play, which

To Learning, Genius, Wit, and Eloquence.
P 4.

I present my Readers with an Act of it, and would, with great Pleasure, finish it, but that I am certain our present Manager would never permit it to be played, merely because it was mine; for since his Prejudice against me, though how I incurred his Displeasure I know not, carried him him so far as to say a Prologue I wrote for the King's Birth-Night was Blasphemy, I don't know but he may be ingenious enough to prove the Play to be High-Treason; but lest my Readers should believe me capable of writing any thing like it, I present them with the Lines.

PROLOGUE.

HILE foreign Climes are rent with dire Alarms,

The Shout of Battle and the Clang of Arms,

Britannia, happy in her Monarch's Care, Enjoys at once the Fruits of Peace, and War; And while her Thunders o'er the Ocean roll,

And spread her rising Fame from Pole to Pole.

Sees her victorious Fleets the Sea command,

And Plenty, Wealth, and Pleasure, bless the Land:

Fair Science joyful, lifts her laurell'd Head, The Muses, in the Groves delighted tread; Or, near the Azure Fount, or haunted Spring,

Their great Inspirer and Protector fing;

The Woods, the Vales refound Augustus' Name.

His glorious Actions, and immortal Fame! Shou'd Heav'n th' inimitable Shakespear raife

To breathe Historic Truth in tuneful Lays, How wou'd the Poet in sublimer Strains With GEORGE's Virtue elevate his Scenes? Transmit his Wisdom to the future Age,

The noblest Theme that e'er adorn'd a

Not the Great Ruler of the genial Year, Whose radiant Beams the whole Creation chear, Inspires such Joy, such Rapture, such Delight,

As fwells each Bosom at their Monarch's Sight.

Oh, may our Loyalty this Bliss deserve, And Heav'n the Hero to our Hopes preferve!

I believe none, but such a Conjurer as Mr. Sherridan, would have found out Blasphemy in these Lines, and I am sorry he did not say they were as stat Burglary too as ever was committed; but he is a Judge, a Gentleman: his Father was an Author, ay, and a Parson! and for the signal Favours he has bestowed on me, I return him these my Acknowledgments!

However, at all Hazards, I'll venture to stand the Test of publishing the Following, because Mr. Cibber approved it.

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 323

THE

ROMAN FATHER, a Tragedy.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

MEN. Appius Claudius, Clodius,
Virginius,
Iccilius.
Officers, Servants, Atte

Officers, Servants, Attendants, &c.

Woмеn. Virginia. Nurse.

ACT. I. SCENE I.

Discovers Appius Claudius, and Clodius.

App. HUS far has Force maintain'd what Cunning won,

And haughty Rome, who with indignant Rage,

Spurn'd off the regal Yoke, now lowly bows

Beneath my stronger Sway!

While under Covert of chusing from the Grecian Laws the best;

P 6

To

To guard her Freedom, and preserve her Power,

I hold Laws, Offices, and all suspended; And in their Place, I substitute my Will, The Rule of Action, and the sov'reign Guide:

Say, Clodius, is it not a Master-piece of Art,

To hold the Romans thus enflav'd?

Clo. Sir, I applaud, and wonder at your Wifdom,

As fair Success has crown'd your tow'ring Hopes:

The bold Plebeians, who with reftless Outrage,

For ever brawl'd at every Innovation,
And urg'd the Senate for the Execution
Of the Agrarian Law, now blefs your Mercy,

For Leave to live, and prate no more of Lands:

The haughty Senators, stripp'd of their Pride,

Retire for Safety to their native Fields,
While the Decemvirate triumphant reign,
Regardless of their Murmurs, or their Threats.

App.

App. And still we mean to hold the Reins of Empire,

Nor quit them but with Life; yet, oh vain Boast!

Why do I fondly talk of ruling others? Who am myself a Slave, a Woman's Slave! The Captive of a fair enchanting Face,

Sweet, as the first young Blushes of the Dawn,

Streaking with rosy Light the Eastern Clouds;

Say, Clodius, hast thou seen the matchless Maid,

The young Virginia?

Clo. Even now, my Lord, I met the blooming Maid, and traced her Footsteps

To Dian's facred Fane, before whose Shrine She bent in lowly Adoration down,

And look'd the chaste Divinity herself.

App. Oh Venus! wilt thou suffer such a Wrong,

That heav'nly Beauty, radiant as thy own, Shou'd, coldly obstinate, reject thy Power?

Clo. However, she may scorn the wanton Goddess, Her

Her Son exerts his Empire o'er her Heart; Her Nurse, whom to your Interest I have brib'd,

By the persuasive Eloquence of Gold,
Gold, the prevailing Argument with Age,
Informs me, that Virginius has contracted
His youthful Daughter to the brave Iccilius,
The noblest Youth of the plebeian Order,
Not more renown'd for military Virtue
Than for the polish'd Arts which soften Life,

And win the Soul of Woman; he to-

In Hymen's Rites for ever joins the Fair.

App. Thy Tale has shot ten thousand burning Arrows,

Which pierce with agonizing Pangs my, Soul:

Oh, should those Charms, which might adorn a Throne,

Be doom'd to the Possession of a Wretch So lowly born, the World might tax my Justice;

I must exalt them to their proper Sphere, Where they shall shine, and bless the won-d'ring World.

Clo.

Clo. You would not wed her.

App. Ignorance! thou know'st I am already married, and our Law's

Still to preferve the noble Blood unmix'd, Forbid Patricians, and Plebeians joining;

And Appius Claudius, from the Greatest sprung,

Shall never fully his illustrious Birth,

Or stoop beneath the Honour of his Race,

To mingle with the People: No, my Clo-dius,

The Name of Marriage is the Bane of Pleafure,

And Love should have no Tie, but Love to bind it;

Wives oft are haughty, infolent, and proud, But sweet Virginia, fair as Infant Nature,

And gentle as the balmy B eath of Spring,

Shall be the Mistress of my soften'd Hours,

And bid them fmile with ever-blooming Pleasure;

But, oh! this sudden Marriage blasts my Hopes!

Clo. Near as it feems, my active Thoughts have schem'd

A Way to rob the Lover of his Blifs,

Only do you approve what I shall act, And trust my Diligence to make her yours, Or fall in the Attempt.

App. I know thee wise,
Active, and resolute; talk not of falling,
Let but thy Skill assist my fond Desire,
And make my Power subservient to thy Will.

Clo. I fee her, Sir, returning from the Temple,

Led by the destin'd Bridegroom; best retire,
Lest Passion hurry you to Indiscretion,
Where Policy, and Crast must win our Cause.

[Exeunt.]

ACT I. SCENE II.

Enter Iccilius, and Virginia.

Iccil. Was not that Appius? how the Ty-rant ey'd me,

As if he mark'd me for his future Victim!
No Matter; let me but enjoy to-morrow,
Let me but live to call Virginia mine,
And I shall rest your Debtor, bount'ous

Let what will come hereafter.

Gods!

Virg. Alas! Iccilius, a thousand boding Cares possess my Soul,

And Heaviness and Woe, unfelt before, Hang deathful on my Heart; to-morrow,

faidst thou,

The Times are full of Violence and Blood,

The Hand of Tyranny destroys the Just,

Virtue is Guilt, when Wickedness is Judge;

Who then can safely answer for a Moment, Or tell where thou or I may be to-morrow?

Iccil. Lock'd in the Circle of each others Arms,

And tasting ev'ry Transport, ev'ry Sweet, Which Hymen, Guardian God of chaste Delights, Profusely sheds to crown the happy Pair, By him in holy Union join'd for ever.

Virg. Believe me, were my Soul to form a Wish,

And have that Wish indulg'd me by the Gods,

For ever to converse with my Iccilius,
To listen to his Eloquence divine,
To learn his Wisdom, to return his Love
With tender Duty, Gratitude, and Truth,

Wou

Wou'd be the utmost Scope of my Desires.

Iccil. Transporting Sounds! oh, may those awful Pow'rs

Render Iccilius worthy to possess thee:

But why, my Fair-one! this dejected Look?

This pining Care, this gloomy Discontent Should only dwell in black and guilty Bosoms;

Serenity of Soul, and tranquil Peace,

Should wait on spotless Innocence like thine. Virg. A dreadful Vision has destroy'd that Peace,

Sent as to warn me of approaching Danger, Nor will the fad Remembrance leave my Soul.

Iccil. Relate this horrid Dream, which fo affrights thee!

Virg. Last Night, when sleep had spread her downy Wings

O'er half Mankind, and lull'd my Cares to Rest,

Methought I walk'd with thee, my dearest Lover!

Thro' flow'ry Meads, in vernal Beauty dress'd,

All Nature bloom'd, around us falling Streams,

And warbling Birds in tuneful Concert join'd,

Charming the Air with Melody divine!

While ev'ry lovely Object of Delight

Receiv'd new Lustre from Iccilius' Presence;

Sudden the Forest shook, and thro' the Trees,

With dreadful Cries, rush'd forth, an hungry Lion,

Who fought me for his Prey; I trembling fled

To my lov'd Father's Arms; he drew his Poignard,

And when I look'd he should have sain the Savage,

With erring Fury plung'd it in my Heart;
The piercing Anguish wak'd me, and the Terror

Remain'd, when all, the horrid Scene was vanish'd.

Iccil. This is the Mimickry of active Fancy,

Who when the Senses are all charm'd to Rest,

Presents herself to the Imagination In vary'd Figures, and unnumber'd Shapes, These lesser Faculties disport at large,

When Reason, sovereign Mistress of the Soul,

O'er-wrought with Care, repairs herself by Rest;

Believe me, 'tis no more; raise then thy Eyes,

And bles Iccilius with their wonted Sweetness:

My Care shall be to seek thy Godlike Father,

And urge him to appoint the blissful Hour,

Then smiling Love each Moment shall employ,

Transporting Rapture, and ecstatic Joy. [Exeunt.

Enter Virginius solus.

Virg. How long, oh Rome! shall thy majestic Head

Be crush'd by the tyrannic Hand of Power? Oh Liberty! thou best Prerogative of Humankind,

How

How have the bloody Decemvirs defaced. Thy most transcendent Beauties? shall they then

Rage unrestrain'd, and violate thy Charms
With bold Impunity? forbid it Heaven!
No; there are yet among us some brave
Spirits,

Who dare affert the facred Cause of Freeddom:

Oh Father Jove, propitious smile upon us! And if my Life, or aught more dear than Life,

May be a Sacrifice acceptable,
Lo I devote it freely to the Cause,
The glorious Cause of Liberty, and Rome!

Enter Iccilius, and Virginia.

Virg. Welcome Iccilius; Welcome, dear Virginia,

My Soul's Delight, my last remaining Comfort.

Iccil. Oh! she was born to give transcendant Joy

To her glad Father, and her raptur'd Lover;
And all those outward Charms so heav'nly sweet,
Are

Are but an Emanation from thy Soul,

Where ev'ry Beauty, Grace, and Virtue live;

Since then your Approbation crowns my Love,

And gives the matchless Virgin to my Wishes,

I claim your Promise, that to-morrow's Sun May see us one.

Virg. Auspicious may it rise upon your Union,

Clear unclouded Days, and Nights of sweet Repose for ever wait you.

I know when Love has winged the eager Wish,

It flies impatient to the promis'd Joy,

Nor shall Delay retard your youthful Ardor; Take her, Iccil us, from her Father's Iccil. Thus kneeling I receive, and blefs your Bounty;

Oh my Virginia! but all Words are faint, To paint the Extafy which swells my Heart:

Nor Air, nor Light, nor Liberty, nor Health,

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 335

To one long pin'd within a joyless Dungeon,

Are half fo lovely, charming, fweet, or welcome!

Enter Messenger.

Mess. An Officer from Appius Claudius, Sir, demands Admittance.

Virg. Bid him enter.

Retire, my Child; what can the Tyrant want? [Exit Virg.

Officer.

The Decemvirate Guardians of our State Greet thee with Honour, and Respect, Virginius,

And signify by me their sacred Pleasure;

A Messenger is from the Camp arriv'd,

With Notice, that the Capuans have re-

And to your Care, brave Veteran, they trust

The Conduct of their Legions: on the Infant

Must you set forth, and thou, Iccilius, with him.

Virg. Their Pleasures be obey'd, but this is sudden.

Off. The Time cries haste, delay not then a Moment;

May Victory and Fame attend your Arms. [Exit Off.

Enter Virginia.

Virg. My Daughter, we must leave you, instant Danger

Demands our Presence in the Roman Camp; Nay, do not weep, we shall not long be absent,

Mean time thy Innocence shall rest in Safety Beneath the friendly hospitable Roof Of good Iccilius' Father. Do not weep, I go to seek him, take a short Farewel, And sollow me.

[Exit Virginius.

Iccilius and Virginia.

Iccil. Oh my lov'd Virginia! are all my eager Longings, Wishings, Hopes, defeated thus? now must
I leave you;

Now.

Now, oh 'tis a Pang too great to bear, and live!

Virg. Thus fade our Dreams of Happiness and Bliss:

Not that a short, or momentary Absence, When our lov'd Country call'd thee to its Aid,

Cou'd shake my Temper; no, I oft with Pride,

Have feen my Hero arm him for the Field, And only griev'd that my weak Sex denied me

To share the glorious Toils, the noble Danger;

But now my fad prefaging Heart affures me,

We part to meet no more.

Iccil. Oh foftest Charmer!

Cease t' afflict me with a Thought so sad, Lest, Coward like, I stain my sacred Honour,

And, fhunning Glory, and the dufty Field, Remain for ever in Virginia's Arms;

For what are Trophies, Honours, Triumphs, Spoils,

Vol. II. Q Th'

M	E	M	0	I	R	S	of
TAT	-	TAT	, \sim	-	7,	U	OT

338

Th' envy'd Pageant, and the People's Shout,

To the transporting Joys of mutual Love,

And Harmony of correspondent Souls?

Virg. No, my Iccilius, let not my fond

Fears

Betray thee into misbecoming Weakness;
I love thy Glory dearer than thy Person,

And wish thy Name enroll'd amongst the foremost

Who arduous trod the fleep Ascent to Fame:

High on the Summit of a lofty Hill, Encompass'd round with Danger, Toil, and Death,

The Goddess stands, and holds the Victor Wreath

Of ever-verdant Laurel! facred Emblem Of undecaying Virtue and Renown;

Who would not wish to gain the glorious

Prize,

And fcorn the Danger, viewing the Reward!

Iccil. Oh thou! well-worthy of the Roman Name,

Not

Not the chaste Fair, who swam the rapid Tyber,

Nor she who fearless pierc'd her snowy Bosom,

And with pure Blood wash'd out the fatal Stain

The brutal Tyrant gave her, e'er posses'd Such Dignity of Soul, such Fortitude, Such Wisdom, or such Innocence as thine; Thy noble Arguments bent to persuade

Thy Lover hence, but charm him here more strongly;

I gaze with endless Admiration on thee, And wonder at a Greatness so divine.

Virg. Forever cou'd I listen to thy Language,

More chearing than the Breath of new-born Spring,

When first her vernal Airs salute the Groves, And wake to Life the Infant Blooms and Flowers,

To deck her lovely Bosom; but no more, Thy Duty calls thee to the Battle now.

[Flourish.

My Father waits you, the protecting Pow'rs
Q 2 Con-

Conduct you forth, and bring you back in Safety.

Iccil. Thy pious Pray'r shall charm down Blessings on us,

And Love shall guard me for Virginia's Sake.

Think with what fierce Impatience I shall burn,

*Till to thy Arms triumphant I return;
To bid thy Sighs, thy Tears, thy Anguish, cease,

And footh thy gentle Soul to Love and Peace. [Exeunt.

END OF THE ACT.

One Day, as I was in my Shop, a Gentleman, very richly dreffed, told me, he had a Letter for me; I received it very respectfully, but could not help smiling when I found it was the Letter I wrote for Tom Brush, neatly copied and directed to me, and that, lest it should miscarry, he had brought it himself.

I faid it was a very genteel Piece of Gall lantry, and quite new. He told me he was going to his Seat in the County of Surrey the next Day, and gave me a very kind Invitation to pass the Remainder of the Summer there, but as he was a young, gay, single Gentleman, I did not hold it convenient.

Pray, Madam, said he, do you never go to the Opera? No, really, Sir; not but that I love Music, but it happens to be too expensive an Entertainment for me: Well then, Madam, returned he, I must insist on having the Honour of treating you to it; on which, he downright forced a Couple of Guineas on me, and making me promise to correspond with him till his Return to London, we parted.

Unfortunately I lost his Direction, and fo had it not in my Power to keep my Word.

And I do affure my Readers, I did not go to the Opera, wifely confidering that two Pound two, would be of infinitely more Service to me, than it could possibly be to Mr. Heydeigger.

But, alas! before the Return of Winter, I had neither Shop, nor almost an Habi-Q₃ tation.

tation. By what strange Reverse of Fortune I was again reduced to the utmost Calamity, and by what unexpected and fignal Mercy delivered from it, must, as it is impossible for me to get it into the Compass of this Volume, be the Subject of a Third.

I should be highly ungrateful not to acknowledge the Favour and Bounty of the whole Body of the Nobility, Clergy, and Gentry of this Kingdom, whose Goodness, as it is my highest Pride to own, so it shall ever be my utmost Ambition to merit; and if their poor Servant can in the least contribute to their Entertainment, she shall think herself over-paid, or, to use my dear Mr. Cibber's Words:

As for what's left of Life, if yet 'twill do.

'Tis at your Service, pleas'd while pleasing you.

But then mistake me not, when you've enough,

One thin Subscription shews all Parties

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 343

Or Truth in bomely Proverb to advance, I pipe no longer than you care to dance.

But, oh my loved, honoured, and excellent Lord Kingsborough! where shall I find Words adequate to the Sense I have of your Goodness, your unlimited Generofity? thou kind Preserver of mine, and my Son's Life!

Did Eloquence divine adorn my Speaking, Tho' ev'ry Muse, and ev'ry Grace should crown me.

Why then, ev'n then, I should fall short Of my Soul's Meaning.

But as with You my Muse began, with You also she must end, yet not 'till I relate the following Story.

I faw in London the truly elegant and beautiful Speech of a certain great Man, not long fince our supreme Governor here; I was really fo charmed with it, that I wrote the following Lines, which I shewed to Mr. Cibber. As his Excellency was returned to England, Mr. Cibber was so well pleafed pleased with them, that, as he was particularly intimate with him, he undertook to deliver them, and said, he did not doubt but he would give me a handsome Reward: To give this Thesis plainer Proof, I put it to the Test.

Q 4

To his Excellency the Earl of CHESTER-FIELD.

THOU! to bind whose awful Brow Triumphant Laurels joy to grow, To whom the Sons of Science bend, As to the great inspiring Soul, That brightens and informs the whole, The Muses Patron, Judge, and Friend.

Never did Britain's King before,

A Substitute so noble find,

Nor ever yet deputed Pow'r

With such transcendent Lustre shin'd.

For when, to grace Hibernia's Throne,
The God-like Chestersield was giv'n,
How did the joyful People own
Their Monarch's Love! the Care of Heav'n?

Mrs. PILKINGTON. 345

On thy exalted * Speech their Senates hung, And bleft the Election of thy Tongue!

'Tis Stanhope can alone untie The Gordian Knot of Policy.

He ev'ry Kingdom's Int'rest knows: Were to his Care the World consign'd, Th' Almighty's everlasting Mind Might there secure his Trust repose.

Thy Genius, for all Stations fit,

The Reins of Empire knows to guide,

Nor less the sacred Realms of Wit

Acknowledge thee their Boast and Pride;

So Phæbus rules the Chariot of the Day,

And charms the Groves with his melodious Lay.

How did of late the Nations fear,
Sickness, the Messenger of Fate,
Would take thee to thy native Sphere,
'Midst throned Gods to hold thy State.
We fear'd a Soul, so eminently wise,
Was call'd to grace th' Synod of the Skies.

Q 5

Skies -

^{*} His Speech to both Houses of Parliament, in Dublia.

But soon the Rose-lip'd Cherub Health, Commission'd by the Pow'r Divine, Restor'd Britannia's Dearest Wealth, The Glory of her Patriot Line.

Oh may'st Thou long from better Worlds be spar'd,

And late receive thy Virtues full Reward.

Ev'n I, whom many Griefs oppress,
Enraptur'd with thy flowing Strain,
A while forget my own Distress,
And Anguish ceases to complain;
Such Charms to Heav'n-born Eloquence belong,

And fuch the magic Force of facred Song.

I ought to have premised, that just as I had finished this Poem, W—rsd—le came in, and snatched it from me, saying he would send it himself to his old Friend Philip. I could not get it from him, but as I remembered every Syllable of it, I wrote it in a better Hand than that rough Draught I had given to Mr. Cibber, and having the Honour of his Correction, who is a fair and candid Critic, fent it again to him.

W—sd—le came in the Evening, told me that the Earl sent him many Thanks, and would be glad to see his old Friend.

Upon this I asked W—rsd—le to lend me Half a Crown to buy a Pair of Shoes, which he absolutely refusing, when he had convinced me he had fifty Guineas in his Pocket, I, though ill-shod, was obliged to rest contented.

Early next Morning I received from Mr, Cibber the following short Epistle:

MADAM,

HE Poetry of poor People, however it may rife in Value, always finks in the Price; what might in happier Hours have brought you ten Guineas for it's intrinsic Worth, is now reduced to two, which I defire you will come and receive from the Hand of

Your old humble Servant,

By this I found Mr. W—rfd—le had beafted of an Interest in his Excellency, which he certainly never had, for who would have even given me that small Reward that had received the Poem before from another Hand, would they not have laughed at me!

I waited on Mr. Cibber, who told me he had given my Poem to his Excellency with these Words: "That if he had not thought it beautiful, he would not have ta-

"As Dinner, faid he, was just brought up

" my Lord put it into his Pocket. In " the Evening I reminded him of it: He " told me he was attack'd by all the ". World with paultry Rhimes, which his

" L-d always best rewarded."

The next Day Mr. Cibber attacked his Excellency again, and asked him how he liked the Lines? Upon which he said, "Oh I had forgot, there's two Guineas for " her, but don't put them into your Sil" ver Pocket, lest you should make a " Mistake and pay your Chair with them:

"So here, Madam, are the two Guineas" for you." As I was entirely indebted to Mr. Cibber for this Bounty, I return my Acknowledgements to Him.

My dear Lord Kingsborough, I never should have related this Story, except by way of Contrast to your amiable Virtues; for I may justly say with Swift,

My fav'rite Lord is none of those,

Who owe their Virtue to their Stations, Or Characters to Dedications; His Worth, altho a Poet said it Before a Play, would lose no Credit. Nor Swift would dare deny him Wit, Altho' to praise it I have writ.

Just as I was writing about W—rsd—le, a Gentleman brought me a Pamphlet entituled, A Parallel between Mrs. Pilkington and Mrs. Phillips, written by an Oxford Scholar, as he tells us, himself, starving in a Garret; Pray, Mr. Scholar, deal ingenously did not W—rsd—le hire you to write it, because he was indolent; dull, I suppose fuppose you mean; if he can write so much better than I, let him give the World a Proof of his Abilities; but it seems, he is discontented that I have not sufficiently exposed him: Why, let him have but a little Patience, and my Life on't he shall have no Cause of Complaint on that Head, but I cannot break in on the Order of Time so far as to give the World a second Act of him, yet

Unity of Time and Place, you know, Mr. Critick, must be observed, otherwise we must renounce the Stagyrite.

If you intend your Performance for a Satire on me, truly your Words are so clerkly couched, that I cannot find any Sting in them,—You say I admired the Dean for being a Brute.—N. B. You lye; and none but a Villain would call him one. I admired his Charity, Wit, Sense, Taste, &c. and to say he had Passions, which obscured for a while his shining and uncommon Excellencies, is no more than saying he was human, and consequently liable to Error.

Then you ask me, how I dare mention Mr. Pope? Why truly, like Drawcansir, all this I can do, because I dare.—I never refused doing Justice to his poetical Merits; but all your Art can never perfuade the World, that he was not an envious Defamer of other Men's good Parts, and intolerably vain of his own. How does he boast of his Acquaintance with the Great, even to childish Folly? The late Earl of Peterborough could not divert himfelf with pruning a Tree in his Garden, but prefently we are told of it in these highfounding unharmonious Words:

And be, whose Thunder storm'd th'Iberian Lines ..

Now forms my Quincunx, and now prues my Vines.

Why, one would have thought he had hired the Earl for a Gardener.

And as for his Gratitude, let that appear by his Poem, called Taste, wherein he abuses the late Duke of Chandos for his Munificence to Writers, whereof take the following Sample: His

His Wealth Lord Timon gloriously confounds,

Ask'd for a Groat, he gives an hundred Pounds;

Or, if three Ladies like a luckless Play, Takes the whole House upon the Author's Day.

Was this any Defect in his Grace's Character, especially in a poetical Eye? No, surely: but I suppose Mr. Pope was angry, as he was not a Dramatick Writer, that his Grace should bestow any Favour on them.

He then proceeds to ridicule his Grace's Library, and the Grandeur and Magnificence of his Improvements.

And when up ten steep Slopes you've drag'd your Thighs,

Just at his Study-door he'll bless your Eyes.

His Study! with what Authors is it for'd?

In Books, not Authors, curious is my Lord.

To all their letter'd Backs he turns you round,

These Aldus printed, these De Sewel bound:

These, Sir, are Elziver's, and those as good,

For all his Lordship knows they are but Wood;

For Locke or Milton 'tis in vain to look, These Shelves admit not any modern Book.

I suppose, because he did not find his own Works there, he resolved at all Hazards to depreciate his Betters. Shall I proceed, or have I said enough

To thee, who hast not Ear, nor Eye, nor Soul to comprehend it.

And now, how dare you to abuse my Husband? Why, thou, poor paultry Garretteer! thou starveling Bard! if I have a Mind to do it myself, what's that to you?

The distant Trojan never injur'd thee.

Pope's Homer.

And

354 MEMOIRS of

And suppose I've a Mind for to drub,
Whose Bones is it, Sir, I must lick?
At whose Expence is it, you Scrub?
You are not to find me a Stick.

Poor Creature! and as you say you are in Necessity, I hope you will be relieved, even by putting together

Figures ill-pair'd, and Similies unlike:

Letty and Conny, pious, precious Pair!

I suppose this this is an Allusion to Nisus and Euryalus; but prithee learn more Wit,

Than to make ill-coupled Hounds

Drag different Ways in miry Grounds.

For I am certain I never was a Match for Mrs. Philips, either in Beauty or in Art, in both of which she reigns unrivalled, and I, as in Duty bound, give her the Preeminence. But

I imagine this Oxonian sitting on his Bed, One greasy Stocking round his Head, While

While t'other he sits down to darn,
With Threads of different colour'd Yarn;
The Remnants of his last Night's Pot
On Embers plac'd, to make it hot;
But now if W—dale deign to drop
A Slice of Bread, or Mutton-chop,
Mounting he writes, and writing sings,
While, from beneath, all Grub-street rings.
Swift.

Ha! have I guessed right? thou wicked Scribbler, that praisest the Worst best, and Best worst; thou art just sit to nurture Fools, and chronicle Small-beer.

Now to criticize on your wonderful Work: In the first Place, you say all my Characters are well drawn, easy, natural and picturesque; and yet after this high Compliment, that I even made a dult Story entertaining by the Force of a sparkling Wit, and retentive Memory; why, presently after I dwindle, by the Force of your Pen, into a mere Dunce: And so though you promised us a Parallel, you give us a Contrast; you are a very witty Fellow, I assure you, and deal much in the the Surprizing. And so you do not like my Poetry, there was no Thought of pleasing you when it was writ; but go to my Treasurer, tell him I order him to give you three hundred Kicks in private, and the Lord send you a better Taste!

Hey-day, the Devil rides on a Fiddle-stick! fresh News arrived! all my Letters to W—rsd—le to be published; oh terrible! well; I hope he will publish every Poem that was inclosed in them, that I may come by my own again? let him return to me three Operas, twenty-sive Odes, the Letters I wrote for him, the Poem which begins,

To distant Climes, while fond Cleora flies.

And then he has my full Leave to publish every Letter of mine that he thinks will serve his Purpose; but remember that if you and he should sit down, and out of your own Loggerheads write Nonsense, and offer it to the World as mine, I enter my Caveat, and will not adopt the spurious Issue. So here I quit ye, and upon mature Deliberation, am forry I wasted so much Time, Paper, and Ink, on so contemptible a Subject as either of ye.

My Lord, I beg Pardon for so long digressing from my darling Theme, but it was almost impossible for me not to bestow those Libellers a Lash;

For, tho' tis hopeless to reclaim them, Scorpion Rods perhaps may tame them. Swift.

And though it is not in reality worth while to pursue Grashoppers, who die in a Season, yet while their Noise offends me, I cannot forbear it.

And, now my Lord, and oh! (fince you permit me to call you by that tender Name) my Friend, and let me add, my Guardian Angel; for furely, very excellent has thy Favour been to me, far furpassing that of Kindred, as you generously bid me name my Wish to you, and obtain it; and as I, broken with the Storms of Fortune, for I may truly say with Holy David, to my Creator,

Even from my Youth up, thy Terrors have I suffered with a troubled Mind, and thou hast vexed me with all thy Storms.

Have little to hope for on this Side Dissolution, and have no other Concern about parting with a Life, which has been but a continual Scene of Sorrow, except that of leaving my Son unprovided for: Let your Favour extend to him, as your Station and Virtue must ever give you a powerful Interest; use a Portion of it to get him some little Employment, or Place, which may give him Bread, when I no more want it.

I flatter myself he will not be entirely unworthy of your Goodness, as he is of a generous, humane, and grateful Disposition.

I must beg your Lordship's Pardon for praising my Son, which indeed, I should not do, but that both his Father and Mr. $A-\epsilon$, endeavoured all in their Power to injure his Character; the latter of whom is since convinced he wronged him.

And here I must apologize for so long deferring the Publication of this Second Volume; and as no Reason is so good as the true one, take it as follows:

When I came to Ireland, I took a House near Bow-Bridge, as well for the Pleasure of a fine Air, as to keep retired from bufy Tongues; but, finding it was highly inconvenient to be at such a Distance from Printers, Stationers, &c. I took a First-Floor in Abbey-Street, and having my own Furniture, fent it there, with Orders to the Men to put up the Beds, which accordingly was done: When I came in the Evening to take Possession of my new Habitation, behold! all my Furniture was torn down, and lying in Heaps in the Passage; when I demanded the Cause of this, I was told, the Reverend Dr. J-n V-ey, who, it feems, lodged in the House, had, by his own special Authority, commanded the Goods should be thrown into the Street, but the Landlord knowing himself liable to be called to an Account for what he had received, did not chuse to obey him in that Article.

Well, as my House was empty, I knew not where I, or my Child could sleep that Night, but, as I was not ill-beloved in the Neighbourhood I left, I went back to it, where a good Woman gave me part of her Bed, and her Husband, my Son, and two little Children of theirs, lay together.

Early next Morning, my Son took a Lodging for me in Big-butter-lane; my Goods, damaged as they were, were carried there, but, wot you well, the Parson followed them! Dr. V—ey, I mean, told the People I was a very bad Woman, and they were again left in the Passage; so when I came, there was no Entrance for me, and I was obliged to return to the Place from whence I came. Mem. I was forty Shillings out of Pocket by this pious Divine, I wish he would pay me.

Next Day my Son took a Lodging for me in Golden-lane, where the Woman no fooner understood I was Dr. Van Lewin's Daughter, who, as she said, saved her Life, but she gladly accepted of me for a Lodger;

but

but what with the Vexation of my Mind, and the Cold I had got, I fell into a violent Fever, and was for many Weeks confined to my Bed, till, by the Care and Skill of Dr. Ould, I was once more enabled to purfue my Work; and, as I am much indebted to his Humanity, I take this Opportunity of acknowledging it.

And now do I expect an Army of Critics to attack my poor Work, and to fave them the Trouble, I will even do it myself, altho' I own the Task to be a little ungrateful. But, Mrs. Pilkington, notwithflanding the Regard and Affection which I really have for you, I must tell you what: the World fays of you; but however, I' will give you fair Play, and allow you to make the best Defence you can for yourself: Suppose you and I enter into a Dialogue, I being the Accuser, begin: Ma-dam, your Story has nothing in it, either new or entertaining; the Occurrences are common, trivial, and such as happen every Day; your Vanity is intolerable, your Stile borrowed from Milton, Shakespear VOL. II. R. and i and Swift, whom you pretend to describe, though you never knew him; you tell us a Story of his Beef being over-roasted, and another of a mangy Dog; fine Themes, truly! for my Part, I wonder you ever got a Shilling for your curious Performance; I am fure it is a Proof of the Stupidity of the Baotians, who, tho' they have still done you the Honour to advertise in every Paper, that you were not a Dunce, proved. themselves to be little better for taking so much Notice of you.

Myself. Hold, hold, you charge me sc fast you do not give me Leave to reply ; to your first Article I plead guilty; my Story is dull enough, it was therefore I strove to embellish it with fuch poetical Ornamente as I could beg, borrow, or steal: I have known a Gentleman write a Latin ! and every Line of it was borrowed from the Classicks, yet this was esteemed a Beauty in him; why then should it be deemed a Fault in your humble Servant? Had I not an equal Right to make free with Milton, Swift, and Shakespear, as he had with Virgil and Horace.

I. Olud, lud I why the best Part of your first Volume, is that which you wrote from yourfelf, without these Auxiliaries.

Myself. Oh, upon my Word you compliment now. I

I. Truly, I did not intend it, but we would rather have some of your own Sruff.

Myself. Why I must bring you a Simile-from what I do not much deal in, that is, Needle-work; do not Ladies buy coarse Canvass, and work thereon Fruits, Flowers, Trees, all Summer, and all Autumn's Pride? and should we say the Canvas would have been better without the Artist's curious Embroidery; the same will hold in Painting.

I. O come, do not think to put us off at this Rate, you give us Quotation on Quotation; why, we know the Works of other Writers, and expected fomething en-rirely new from your superior Pen.

Myself. I am sorry it is not in my Power bige you, but Kings and Prophets, who wed before me, have declared, there was nothing new under the Sun.

I. But you shew no Reverence, either to Ermin, Crape or Lawn.

Myfelf. O I really do, when the Wearers deserve them; but I hope you would not have me pay Homage to the Things themfelves? Why then, I may go and kneel down to all the Goods in the Shops, because as the Author of The Tale of a Tub, says, in them we live, move, and have our Being.

I. But have you no farther Regard to Station? Is your licentious Pen to lash all Orders and Degrees People? are you to indulge your laughing, and lashing Humour, at every Bodies Expence.

Myself. Why, sure I have a Right to it; have they not laughed and lashed me round? This is but a Retaliation, they were the first Aggressors; no Person who did not deserve a Stripe, ever got one from me: Is Station a Privilege for doing every. Thing Evil with Impunity? If so, let Salan on his burning Throne be honoured!

I. Well, upon my Word, Mrs. Pilkington, I am weary of your Arguments; you feem resolved to get the better of me, and that my Readers may always be assured I will do, when I am both Plaintiff and Defendant.

And I affure my Readers, that if my Third Volume is not filled with more furprizing Events, and infinitely more entertaining than either of the foregoing, I will for ever quit my Magic Art, and

Deeper than did ever Plummet sound,
I'll drown my Book.

Shakespear.

OCT 11 1917

Henry Thomas Buckle.

